GREAT BRITAIN.

The Irish Church Bill—Continuation of the Debate in the Lords—Amendments Adopted.

LONDON, Tuesday, July 6.

In the House of Lords last night the consideration of the Irish Church bill was resumed. Lord LIFFORD moved an amendment, granting the value of their manses to the Presbyterians.

Earl GRANVILLE opposed the amendment on the ground that it would aggravate the mischief of the decision arrived at by the House on Friday night, when it rejected the amendment to permit the churches to retain their ecclesiastical residences without payment thereof.

Lord LIFFORD withdrew his amendment.

The Archbishop of Canterbury moved an amendment to clause 20, that private endowments made since 1560, instead of 1660, be retained by the Church. He pointed out the large endowments which had been made prior to 1660, and said there was no reason why they should not be dealt with in the same manner as those made after that date. To show such an unjust discrimination he thought was most dangerous; it would shake the faith of the people in private endowments.

Lord HATHERLEY opposed the Archbishop's amendment, on the ground that private endowments made prior to 1660 were purely mythical. He said the "Ulster Grant" was an appropriation to Church uses of public money and land won by the English while putting down rebellion; in no sense was it a private endowment.

The Bishop of Peterborough supported the amendment, urging that neither on the ground of justice nor of legal right ought the Church to be deprived of these early endowments.

Earl GRANVILLE said the difficulty in establishing the legality of these early endowment rights would swallow up the whole amount of their value in litigation, and he proposed to grant half a million sterling in money instead.

The Marquis of SALISBURY objected to the bringing up at the last moment of fresh proposals by the Government, and proposed that the consideration of clause 20 be postponed.

Lord CAIRNS suggested the passage of the clause without date or amendment, leaving Earl GRANVILLE's proposition to be considered in the report.

The Archbishop of Canterbury then moved an amendment that all glebe lands granted by the Crown since 1660 be given to the new Church body. After a long discussion a division was had and the amendment was carried by a vote of 105 to 81.

Clauses 20, 21 and 22 were agreed to. Clause 23 was taken up.

The Earl of LIMERICK moved an amendment providing that the poor rates be deducted from any rent charge sold in lieu of tithes.

The Marquis of SALISBURY remarked that this clause was an arithmetical puzzle, but was evidently intended as a sop to the Irish landlords. The Government proposed to act fairly, but the bill was the most penurious and emasculating measure ever devised. If the Government had come boldly forward and avowed the clauses which distinctly represented their principles, they would have commended themselves more to all classes of the country.

The House divided on the Marquis of LIMERICK's amendment, and it was adopted by a vote of 91 to 64.

Clause 23, as amended, and clauses 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28 were agreed to.

The Earl of CORK and MOUNTCASHEL, believing the feeling of the House was against the amendment to cancel the Regium Donum and Maynooth College clauses, withdrew it. The Regium Donum clause was agreed to.

Lord FITZWALTER renewed the amendment to strike the Maynooth College clause from the bill.

The Earl of BANDON objected to the clause because it was a violation of the principles set forth in the preamble.

Lord CAIRNS admitted that was good ground for objection, but he would not vote for the rejection of the clause, because it would result in throwing the charge of the Maynooth grant on the Consolidated Fund.

The Duke of ARGYLL defended the clause, and the Duke of RUTLAND opposed it.

The House then divided on the question of retaining the Clause, as it stands, with the following result:

For the Clause	146
Against it	92

Clauses 29 to 67, inclusive, were agreed to, and the House adjourned.

Dean STANLEY preached a sermon on the 4th of July, in which he made allusion to American Independence and to the relations of England and the United States. He strongly deprecated the use of irritating expressions by those in authority in either country.

LONDON, Tuesday, July 6—Midnight.

The House of Lords to-night took up the Irish Church bill at clause 68.

Lord CAIRNS moved as an amendment to postpone the question of the disposal of the surplus, because much time must elapse before its realization, and he objected to its application to relieve others from legal obligations.

Earl GRANVILLE condemned the amendment. It would, if adopted, have the effect to verify the prophecies that the bill would give no satisfaction.

The Duke of CLEVELAND regretted the failure of the proposition for concurrent endowment. He urged that the surplus fund be held until Parliament should be more fully able to decide in regard to its application.

The Duke of ABERCORN supported the original clause.

The Marquis of SALISBURY protested against the reckless conduct shown in throwing away a large fund. He ridiculed the declarations of the members of the Government that though individually in favor of concurrent endowment under the present circumstances, they deemed it impossible. It was lamentable to see Her Majesty's Ministers sacrifice not only their own convictions, but considerations of the highest policy and statesmanship at the bidding of the Liberation Society.

The Earl of KIMBERLY urged the Lords to be content with the amendments made, and not forfeit them by rendering it impossible for the House of Commons to accept the bill as amended.

After a protracted debate the House divided and Lord CAIRNS' amendment to postpone the disposal of the surplus fund was adopted by a vote of 130 against 91.

The clauses of the bill which had previously been passed over were then considered and agreed to with some verbal alterations.

The preamble of the bill was also amended to make it agree with the alteration made in clause 68.

The bill then passed the Committee.

LONDON, Tuesday, July 6.

The London Times to-day has an editorial article on the subject of the anniversary of American Independence. The writer says: "The Americans now feel that they can speak of themselves and of their neighbors in a calm and dignified tone. With the boasting of the old time we may expect most of the old acrimony to vanish. The American people ought to be in a friendly spirit after their monster Peace Festival. Such a demonstration in favor of peace—such a prodigious condemnation of strife—ought to have a softening effect on the most strenuous asserter of the Alabama claims."

Minister JAY gave a toast to the health of Baron VON BEUST.

At Stuttgart two hundred Americans and their friends sat down to dinner. Mr. HERZANDS presided. THE VIRGINIA ELECTION.

Quiet Election Day in Virginia—Election of the Walker Ticket by a Large Majority—The Congressional Delegation.

RICHMOND, Va., Tuesday, July 6.

The election passed off quietly. After night fall the streets resounded with shouts for WALKER and the victory in the State. A meeting of Walker men was held and addressed by six colored men and several whites, including Mr. HUNTSCOTT. Prominent Walker men here claim the State by 5,000 majority, and a decisive majority in both branches of the Legislature. Prominent Wells men claim that they have a decided majority in the State, but give no figures. Nearly every telegram received here by either side shows large gains for WALKER and a serious split in the colored vote, which is was claimed would be cast solid for WELLS. The heaviest defection of colored men from the Wells ticket, is in the Southern counties where the Walker men run several colored men for the Legislature. In Charlotte, a very strong colored county, 400 blacks voted for WALKER.

Up to midnight telegrams were received which announced that WALKER had carried the following counties: Bedford, by 1,000 majority; Augusta, by 3,000 majority; Albemarle, by 300 majority; Culpepper, by 200 majority; Washington, by 1,000 majority; Smith, by 1,000 majority; Louisa, and all the white counties west of the mountains.

WELLS carries Petersburg by 1,500, Greenville by 500, and Chesterfield, Nottaway, Charlotte and Halifax.

The Congressional candidates successful, as far as heard from, are PORTER, (a Wells man,) in this District; BOOKER, (Walker man,) in Pittsylvania District; NORTON, (colored,) in the York District, and MCKENZIE in the Alexandria District. In very few counties have the blacks polled their registered votes, while the whites everywhere have polled nearly their entire strength. In this Legislative District the Walker men claim 300 majority, which gives them eleven members of the Legislature. It is estimated by old politicians here that Governor WELLS' defeat is the most decided that occurred since the Presidential campaign of 1860.

The Constitution, with the objectionable clauses expungated, is adopted by an overwhelming majority. About thirty counties have been heard from, which give WALKER nearly 15,000 majority.

RICHMOND, Va., July 7—1:30 A. M.

Thirty-three counties heard from give WALKER about 15,000 majority.

Singular Tragedy in Terre Haute, Ind.—Two Editors Shot by a Policeman.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Tuesday, July 6.

This afternoon about 2 o'clock C. W. BROWN and Major O. Y. SMITH, editors and proprietors of the Saturday Evening Gazette, were shot by EDWIN S. ERNY, a policeman, under circumstances of a most unprovoked character. Major SMITH was returning from his dinner to the office, and as he passed the corner of Third and Main streets, ERNY assaulted him with a billy. Stunned and bewildered by the blows, SMITH ran into the middle of the street, ERNY following him up and dealing him several more blows before he reached the opposite side of the street. By this time SMITH succeeded in drawing his pistol, and attempted to shoot, but missed fire. ERNY then jumped behind a lamp-post, and drawing a large navy revolver, fired at SMITH, who fired at the same time. ERNY's shot took effect in SMITH's leg. He then started across the street and motioned to Mr. BROWN, who had by that time reached the ground, and again drew his revolver and fired at BROWN, the shot taking effect in his breast and producing, it is feared, a mortal wound. The affair causes the most intense excitement in this city.

SECOND DAY.

The Irish Republican Convention reassembled at Farwell Hall this morning. A number of delegates who were not present yesterday, made their appearance to-day. The Committee on Platform presented their report, which was discussed nearly the entire day, and finally adopted, as follows:

The Irish Republicans of the United States of America, in National Convention assembled at Chicago, Ill., on the 4th of July, 1869, have made the following declaration of principles:

Resolved, That it is the duty of the Irish people in this Republic, and of all men over the world, to give their support to those who, on principle, contend for the rights of all men, without liberty, without regard to race, color, creed or sex.

Resolved, That loyalty to the American Republic, a fixed and unalterable determination to stand by the cause of Freedom and Humanity, and to preserve and defend it against the attack and machinations of all its enemies, is the first political duty which the Irish citizens of this country are called upon to discharge.

Resolved, That to spread the principle of freedom is a duty we owe to ourselves and to the oppressed people of the earth, and one which is by all means consistent with the international obligations we are bound to discharge.

Resolved, That we ask for the oppressed people of Cuba, Venezuela, Crete, and the extermination of all enslaved lands, the sympathy and aid of the people and Government of the United States.

Resolved, That we protest against the presence of the armed forces of Europe on this continent, and tender our hearty cooperation to any plan adopted for their removal.

Resolved, That to Senators SUMNER of Massachusetts, and CHANDLER of Michigan, we tender our hearty thanks for the noble efforts made by them to resolve justice for the insults and injuries inflicted by England on this country, and which are known as the Alabama claims; and that we pledge our resolutions to stand by the Government of the Republic in holding upon its single responsibility the wrong committed and full compensation for the injury inflicted.

Resolved, That the Fenian Society (so called) being a secret and oathing device of the enemies of mankind, says the very foundation of American prosperity and independence; and that we, in the interests of the oppressed American citizens, will do all in our power to extend protection to American industry, and for those only who maintain the principles of protection, and who will make honest efforts to embody it in a practical form, should the votes of the Irishmen in America be given.

Resolved, That the jealousy which induces so many to neglect the cultivation of the soil and congregate in great cities, we regard as an evil, and one which is fraught by the institutions of the Irish people of the country, of its being injurious, if not fatal, to the perpetuity of our institutions; take measures to afford facilities to our fellow-countrymen to settle down on the free and fertile lands of this great and glorious country.

Resolved, That we recall to the Irish Republicans of the Republican cause at the late Presidential election, and pledge to President GRANT our cordial and earnest support in preserving and defending the great principles of Liberty and Equality.

Resolved, That the existing Neutrality laws have been enacted only in aiding the monarchies of the earth in sustaining their despotic power, and in preventing and having, in various occasions, placed the American Government in the anomalous position of using their power to aid and assist the oppressors, and receiving only in return active and open hostility from the British Government, we pledge ourselves to labor for their entire repeal.

The first resolution passed by a vote of 41 to 40, the words "or sex" being the chief objection to it. There was also a divided sentiment on the seventh resolution.

A resolution was offered and passed, after considerable debate, requesting Congress to pass a law making foreigners citizens in one year after their arrival in this country.

A resolution was also passed in favor of the formation of immigration societies; also, against any distinction as to race or color in membership of trades' union associations.

The Convention then adjourned.

Burning of Thompson's Hotel at Lake Mahopac—Escape of the Guests—Extensive Damage.

LAKE MAHOPAC, N. Y., Tuesday, July 6.

Thompson's Hotel, situated near the borders of Lake Mahopac, was entirely destroyed by fire at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The fire originated in the kitchen, and was caused, as supposed, by a defective pipe leading to the chimney. All of the guests, numbering two hundred, were removed to the neighboring hotels and property cared for. The greater part of the furniture and baggage was saved, although in a damaged condition. The loss is estimated at $80,000, and is mostly covered by insurance. The hotel was capable of accommodating two hundred and fifty guests.

The Counterfeiting Case in Georgia—Release of the Macon Prisoners.

ATLANTA, Ga., Tuesday, July 6.

TURNER, (colored,) the Postmaster at Macon, Ga., was released by the United States Marshal last night, and returned to Macon. The women having in their possession the United States Treasury notes were released on $500 bonds, after a private consultation between the United States Marshal and some lawyers. The whole affair will be exposed in a few days, and the guilty parties brought to trial.

The Aerial Ship "Aviator" at San Francisco—Commencement of the Frame Upon Its.

SAN FRANCISCO, Tuesday, July 6.

The trial of the model of the air-ship "Aviator," yesterday, is pronounced a success by the Times, while the Alta says the performance was something like a failure. The wind blew so hard that it was impossible to make the experiment in open air, so the trial was made under cover. The ship rose in the air, and was propelled backward and forward and guided in any desired direction by the steering apparatus. It is claimed that the present "Aviator" is not a criterion of success; the principle has been developed. The scale of its machinery is so trifling—the engine and boiler weighing less than a hundred pounds—that its failure of success would be a matter of no surprise.

Serious Railroad Accident at Flushing, L. I.—An Old Lady Killed.

FLUSHING, L. I., Tuesday, July 6.

This afternoon as the 1 o'clock train was being made up at Flushing, an old lady named BURCHELL attempted to get on the train and pass from one car to the other. The train being moved at that moment she fell between the cars, and her head falling on the track was crushed to a jelly. It was the fault of the old lady, and not of the railroad employes, as the train was ready to receive passengers, but was being moved from one part of the yard to the proper place for starting.

Railroad Enterprises in Georgia—The Harbor of Brunswick.

MACON, Tuesday, July 6.

The harbor of Brunswick, Ga., has railroad connection with the interior. The Macon & Brunswick Railroad, one hundred and ninety miles, will be completed by Nov. 1—in time for the Fall cotton crop. The harbor of Brunswick is the best on the South Atlantic Coast, having depth of water for the largest frigate that floats.

Attempt to Break Jail at Hudson.

HUDSON, N. Y., Tuesday, July 6.

A desperate attempt was made to break jail in this city yesterday. The plastering and mortar had been removed, and the stones in the wall loosened so that a slight push would throw them out and allow the prisoners to escape. The plot was discovered in season to prevent its execution.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

LONG BRANCH, July 6.—The season at Long Branch was thoroughly inaugurated yesterday. The first grand hop of the season, given last night at the Stetson House, was an unprecedented success. The parlors and halls of the hotel were thronged with the elite of our principal cities, among whom were many prominent citizens of New-York and Philadelphia. The season has been ushered in under more than favorable auspices, and all look for one of unusual gaiety and interest.

HUDSON, N. Y., July 6.—A lad named BRUSO was accidentally injured yesterday morning by the bursting of a small cannon, while he was in the act of firing it. It is thought it will be necessary to amputate his right leg. On Sunday afternoon WM. WEBSTER, aged 18 years, was killed by the bursting of a cannon at West Stockbridge, Mass., while a salute was being fired by EDWARD GANON.

BOSTON, July 6.—An unsuccessful attempt was made yesterday morning to rob the safe of CRAMPER & CUMMINGS, in East Cambridge. HUGH HILEY, one of the burglars, was arrested. He says he belongs in New-York, and has served two terms of imprisonment there.

KEY WEST, Fla., July 6.—The British ship Mosert was got off without any assistance. The wreckers threw over part of her cargo.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 6.—The cricket match between the Blue Stockings, of Cincinnati, and Kentucky Club, of Louisville, resulted as follows: Blue Stockings, 191; Kentucky Club, 130. The attendance was very large.

WASHINGTON.

The Union Pacific Railroad—Testimony of Messrs. Wade and Brooks Regarding its Stability—Statement for Oliver Ames, Esq.—The July Currency Balance in the Treasury—Personal.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, July 6.

Hon. B. F. WADE and Hon. JAMES BROOKS, Government Directors in the Union Pacific Railroad, telegraph as follows to the Secretary of the Interior:

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, June 28, 1869.

To the Secretary of the Interior:

We have been over the two Pacific Railroads from Omaha to Sacramento, almost all by daylight, at a rate of thirty miles an hour, and we find them to be as good as any new roads ever made in this country. Where not perfected, as from Echo Canyon to Humboldt, hundreds of laborers are now perfecting the work as fast as possible. We are satisfied that all has been done in good faith.

B. F. WADE,
JAMES BROOKS.

The Interior Department has received and printed as an appendix to the report of Messrs. WARREN and BLACKBURDERNEN of May 29, which gave an estimate of nearly seven millions as necessary to bring the Union Pacific Railroad up to the standard, the following letter from OLIVER AMES, Esq., President of the Company:

OFFICE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, BOSTON, June 14, 1869.

SIR: I desire to call your attention to inclosed report of General G. M. DODGE, Chief Engineer of Union Pacific Railroad, and accompanying affidavits of W. SNYDER, General Superintendent, and of S. B. REED, Superintendent and Engineer of Construction. These affidavits show an expenditure of $6,272,977 26 in bringing up the road to the requirements of the Commissioners, leaving but $2,420,452 on their estimate to be expended to fully meet said requirements. I wish to call your attention to a few estimates made by the Commissioners which the opening of the road shows to have been entirely erroneous. They require sixty-eight new locomotives. We have ordered forty locomotives in addition to what we had when their estimate was made, and have now forty or fifty more than we can work. They require 400 box freight cars for each track. We have too many already. They require seventy additional locomotive stalls, which is forty more than we need. They require enlarging our shops at Omaha, to enable us to do all the very extensive of repairs incident to so rapid construction of the road, and to build about four of our cars per diem. We erected extensive shops at Omaha, which we now find larger than the business of the road demands. Since the completion of the road we find most of our shops too large. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars more will supply all the additional shops needed for one week over the entire line. They require us to repair sixty-nine engines at $6,000 each, while to-day but twelve need repair. Our engines are all new, very few over two years old, while the great mass of them have been in use less than one year. The Government can rely upon us to keep our rolling stock and machinery in good order. We are now running one through passenger train a day each way, and freight and construction trains adequate for the business of the road. The large part of our construction trains will soon be dispensed with. We have a very large surplus of motive power and rolling stock. A few passenger cars only are needed, in case we run two trains a day. Not expecting to have the road finished before July, we had cont

NEW-YORK AND ITS OVERFLOWINGS.

Bridging East River—Suspension Bridge of Cincinnati—Overflow of New-York—Where it Goes—Necessity of Providing for it—Increase of Ferry Passengers.

THE BENCHES, Friday, July 2, 1869.

The other day I stood on the suspension bridge from Cincinnati to Covington, and when I remembered the past history of those towns, and looked upon the panoramic scene of cities, towns and vessels, it seemed the realization of COLE's picture of "The Course of Empire," (which is somewhere in New-York,) at that point in which civilization had reached its height, while the great river was bridged, connecting two cities; when cities and towns and factories and farms where the forest stood, and the steamboat whistle was substituted for the wolf's long howl, and the railroad train had supplanted the slow, laboring wagon, clubbing through hills and swamps. I had seen all this myself. I had heard the wolf howl in the environs of Cincinnati. I had seen the sloop on the Ohio, the horse ferry-boat, the steam ferry-boat, the canal and the railroad, as each rose to succeed the other. To me it seemed rather a wild and adventurous scheme to build a suspension bridge of the Ohio. Thirty years before, I and a speculative gentleman from the South had planned a bridge over the Ohio. We knew it must come, but cars were to be a bridge on piers, and was provided for navigation by a draw. But we had at that time no idea of a suspension bridge, and when it was proposed, I started a little. I swallowed railroads whole when they were first proposed; I saw at once that they were a success, and I said Ohio must have one in every county town. But to suspend a bridge over a great river and have it safe, seemed to me not only novel, but almost impracticable. But the engineers said it could be done, and here it is—very magnificent, but much more useful. It literally makes Cincinnati, Covington and Newport one, and almost annihilates time, which used to be a large article of expense. As the cars moved gently over, a continual stream of carts, wagons, carriages and passengers flowed constantly on. Now a great railroad bridge is building, and thus we have made another grand move in social progress.

Taking this as a text, let me say something about New-York and its needs. When I first noticed New-York it was not more than half the size of Cincinnati. The whole City was below Canal-street. At that time Nobody talked of Brooklyn. Jersey City was a little village, and nobody dreamed that a New-Yorker would go to the shores of the Sound or into Jersey to find a comfortable home. Some years before that, when my father and mother came from the West to visit their friends, New-York was not so far advanced as Cincinnati, in the way of ferry-boats; for, they actually used a sail-boat between Jersey City and New-York! They had not even arrived at a horse-boat! Many years after, they got steamboats; and now you are talking of a suspension bridge from New-York to Brooklyn. Well, you will certainly depend only as to time, upon the men who are to advance the money. When you do have one, you will be astonished. It will be a grand affair, but the grandeur of it will be less than the utility. It is doubtful whether one will do.

My mind was brought to this subject by seeing the sketch of a lecture delivered in Brooklyn by Mr. DENAH BARNES. He gave some interesting facts, and I can add something to them. Mr. BARNES states the number of ferry passengers at New-York to be as follows:

Over the Hudson river lines	36,000,000
Over the Brooklyn lines	35,000,000
Aggregate	70,000,000

Probably a million more should be added from Staten Island and Amboy, and a good many more for the small island ferries. On the whole, we may put down 85,000,000 of ferry passengers to and from New-York. Now, I have the means—without going into the details of ferry statistics—of making a comparison, which will show the growth of outside New-York—that is, of the members who, while doing business in New-York, live elsewhere. In the year 1862 the Treasury Department made a report to the Senate on the steam navigation of the United States. In that report the whole number of passengers carried by ferry-boats at New-York was stated at 24,000,000. Things less than the number who now cross to Jersey. The comparison for sixteen years stands as follows:

In 1862	24,000,000

Thus the increase is 250 per cent, or an addition of sixty millions to the number of persons who ferry to and from New-York in sixteen years. There is no probability that this growth of outsiders will be discontinued; on the contrary, it may be questionable whether, twenty years hence, there will be any inhabitants in New-York below Central Park, except those who are absolutely necessary to the transaction of business. Why should there be? It is demonstrated that men can transact business in the City readily and live forty miles outside; and horses can live twenty miles out, and attend to their business. At this distance, however, the quantity of disposable land is so great that there can always be found cheap lots and cheap houses, much more comfortable than in the City. If lots and houses are held too high in one town, another will be immediately laid out, as you see in the columns of the New-York papers. Cheap homes in the country is the great desideratum of City men, and they can always be had twenty miles out. Then we have a constant flow to the country from all the great cities, and the flow will go on in a much greater degree. A recent census showed that not one-third the people who do business in the old City of London lived there. Even in Cincinnati the flow is constantly to the suburbs, and far beyond into the country. As street cars are increased, and railroads make hourly trips, the flow to the country will be still more rapid. We have not yet reached, by any means, the full meaning and effect of this new element of civilization. Indeed, I see no reason why cities should exist for any other purpose than as markets of business. I think it is a total mistake for people to live in cities; and it is a mistake which not only a year, but nearly the whole world soon find out. As fast as the railroads learn their true policy of running fast trains and cheap commutation tickets, the great body of people will go to the country. Another improvement should be made by those who lay out country towns, and that is the Philadelphia plan of ground rents—which is a real sale, paying ground rent till the conditions of sale are fulfilled.

Taking these facts into view, of a continual overflow, and of increasing, that overflow, it is evident that if bridges be possible to Brooklyn or over the North River, they ought to be made. If the distance is too great for a single suspension bridge, it may be divided into two or three, of 1,000 feet each. That is long enough passage way for the navigation of any number of vessels. I do not believe the great overflow will be to Brooklyn, because Brooklyn is a great city, and you encounter there the same difficulty of dear houses and rents. Men want cheap homes for the middle classes, quiet and rural. Evidently New-Jersey is the place for that. There has been a great flow to Elizabeth, Newark, Rahway, &c., &c. But they are cutting down and city-fied. Lay out new places on all the roads, and sell lots cheap. That is the way to put down this city humbug of costly houses and dear rents. When the people of moderate means have sense enough (as they soon will have to) know they can live cheap in the country, much more comfortably, there will be a great explosion of the high-rent humbug. The rich will begin live long in crowded cities, when the great middle class have left them for the country. That will soon happen, and there will be a grand scramble for them. Few people realize what great revolutions are going on. Our modern speculators are just awakening all the old modes of life, and they will be wise who take notice in time of coming revolutions. Brooklyn and New-York need the East River Bridge, and science can accomplish it. It will be a grand structure, and the Pyramids of Egypt will cease to be wonderful to those who stand on the suspension bridge of New-York.

But New-York is not the only place where revolutions are going on. Even in Cincinnati there are great revolutions, and some startling think, will seriously affect the trade of New-York. The suspension bridge has ceased to be a novelty there; but the Southern Railroad is coming up to be a thing of national importance. Day before yesterday was the suspension bridge; yesterday the direct railroad to Louisville; to-day is the great railroad bridge building; to-morrow will be the Southern Railroad; and Cincinnati will be the great central city of the Union. Progress is going on with irresistible force, and the coming generation will see nobler things than the world has ever seen, and this Continent will be the last scene of a regenerated world.

A VETERAN OBSERVER.

THE NEW DOMINION.

Dominion Day—The First Celebration—Banners at Ottawa—The Governor-General—Alleged Embezzlement of Public Funds—Annual Free Excursion.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TORONTO, Saturday, July 3, 1869.

The observance of Dominion Day appears to have been pretty general throughout the Provinces, and the various estimates passed off with great enthusiasm. Here there was no procession or other demonstration, but the day was kept as a holiday, and places and exercises were suitable to the occasion. In other cities they had celebrations of a marked character. At Hamilton it was a great gathering of the Masonic fraternity, headed by the Grand Master, who laid the corner-stone of a new Episcopal Church. Masons attended from about thirty distant lodges. They were joined by St. George's and the Irish Protestant Benevolent Societies, and made an imposing appearance. This was followed by games, said to have been the best that have taken place in Canada. The principal purse of $200 was won by King Tom, a horse owned by Mr. CHAPELL, of Detroit. The race was two-mile heats, two in three. King Tom was ridden by a colored boy, and took the first heat with apparent ease. In the second heat, however, his rider pulled up suddenly after passing the mile post, and the other five, Tom Wolfolk, Racer, Fetherlegs, Lucy and Rabbit Hash, pushed on. The boy put spurs to King Tom, and was enabled to come in a good second, Tom Wolfolk taking the heat. The colored boy was broadly charged with having sold the race, and another rider was obtained. It is believed the boy made the mistake of supposing he had won the race on passing the first mile post. King Tom won the third heat in splendid style. The races were continued yesterday, and Mr. THOMPSON, an Ex-Alderman of this city, was thrown in a steeple-chase, between two banks, by Mary Mansfield, a fine hurdle mare, with which only a short time since he won the steeple-chase here. He was very seriously injured, and died at Hamilton in a dangerous state.

All through the country places Dominion Day was celebrated with even greater spirit than in the towns, and now that it has been proclaimed a holiday for the future, it will be still more enthusiastically observed.

AFFAIRS AT THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

The prorogation of Parliament was a great relief to the Government, for they were fast getting into difficulty, and very little would have brought on a crisis. Since the departure of the people's representatives the members of the Government have been straightening up matters for a long vacation, and most of them have gone to their respective homes. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD and Mr. HOWE are about the only ministers now in Ottawa. Cabinet meetings are at an end for the present, and the capital has resumed its wonted dullness. The defeat of the Ministry on a proposition to increase the salary of the new Warden of the Kingston Penitentiary caused the Premier much annoyance. He represents Kingston, and was supposed to have so much his own way in making appointments in his own constituency, that no one dreamt he would be interfered with when he made a Protestant Warden in room of a Roman Catholic, who had to make way for him. Mr. MOYLAN, editor of the Canadian Freeman, was the favorite for the position, but Sir JOHN had set his affections on Mr. FERRIS, one of the Prison Inspectors, and a former member of Parliament, and he had him appointed. The Lower Canadian Catholics in the House could not brook what they viewed as an insult in thus removing a co-religionist to make room for Mr. FERRIS; so, when it was proposed to increase the salary of the Warden, they unceremoniously voted it down. This appears to have excited ill-will in the Cabinet, as it was thought Sir GEORGE E. CARTIER might have used his influence with his supporters, most of whom voted against the Government. It seems, however, that there is now a sort of truce proclaimed, and the anger of the Catholics has been appeased by giving Mr. MOYLAN an appointment as Special Emigration Commissioner to Ireland. How long this little difficulty may remain patched up there is no saying. It is evident that very little is needed to disturb the harmony of the Cabinet, which is somewhat uncertain just now.

SIR JOHN YOUNG.

His Excellency the Governor-General, and Lady YOUNG, took their departure yesterday, intending to make the tour of the Dominion before returning to the seat of Government. They have gone first to Montreal, where they are to be the guests of Mr. ROSS, the Finance Minister. At Quebec the Board of Trade have decided to honor Sir JOHN with a public banquet, and that the city is spared the disgrace of receiving the Governor-General without some token of appreciation of his merits. The City Council positively declined to do anything in the matter, and private subscriptions have been taken up to defray the cost of a demonstration. His Excellency is likely to meet with a cold reception, notwithstanding the great flourish of trumpets that has ended his arrival in this country. He is only popular in a personal sense, but not never expect to share the same public popularity as Lord MONCK or Lord ELGIN. No doubt he will answer well enough as the representative of royalty in this country, but cannot command that high position so nicely maintained by some of his predecessors. It is said that he will visit the Western part of Ontario some time in the Fall, and may possibly be present at the Provincial Agricultural Exhibition at London.

ALLEGED EMBEZZLEMENT OF PUBLIC FUNDS.

Mr. BRUNSWICK, chief clerk in the Receiver-General's Department of the Government, at Ottawa, has got into a very serious difficulty, and will require all the assistance of Mr. CAMERON to get him out of it. He is charged with having appropriated to his own use $11,000, some accounts, but it must appear, some of which has been paid into the Department since his arrest. Having had charge of the distribution of certain moneys coming to the municipalities, he is accused of "cooking his accounts," and thereby embezzling as he wished. The discovery appears to have been made by a member of Parliament, who, in looking over the public accounts, found that the sum of $1,100 was charged against the Township of Markham, as having been paid that amount of Timmy Receiver-Money, when, in fact, it was only entitled to $700. An investigation followed the matter in Mr. BRUNSWICK, who had pocketed the $1,000; at all events, he has not been able to account for the discrepancy. Other sums have been similarly charged in the books, and the differences supposed to have gone to Mr. BRUNSWICK. Mr. CAMERON is doing his best to screen the relative of his client, but the charges seem to be too serious to be so easily disposed of. Mr. BRUNSWICK was believed to bear a good reputation, but dark hints are now thrown out that he was in some way implicated with a former official of the Department, who left on account of certain defalcations. It is quite certain that he has been living beyond his means, giving grand parties, driving his carriage, and doing things in quite extravagant style in general. He purchased a property for which he was to pay $7,000, and all this he expected to take out of a salary of $1,000 a year. Government officials sometimes meet with generous friends, who reward them liberally for any little favor conferred, and no doubt Mr. BRUNSWICK had his share of such generosity. Champagne suppers to Government officials, and from them to Ministers, mean something more than the mere pleasure of partaking of them. It will be well if there are no drawn nets say investigation that may take place in Mr. BRUNSWICK's transactions.

THE PRESS EXCURSION.

The annual meeting of the Canadian Press Association takes place at Cobourg on the 20th inst. The members of the Press will make a trip to Rice Lake on the same day, and the following morning will proceed to Rochester, thence to Oswego, perhaps Utica, then across to Kingston, Picton and Belleville. It is expected that there will be a large attendance of members.

GREEK AGAINST GREEK.

A Creditable Examination.

One of the interesting features of the recent Commencement at Columbia College was the awarding of the Trustees' Greek prizes. The fact that these prizes exist, and that there was earnest and active competition for them among the students, is some evidence, perhaps, that the classical side of the college course is still vigorously maintained in spite of the seemingly almost overshadowing importance of the scientific course. These is wisdom, undoubtedly, in thus letting the two sides go by side, and each exercise its full influence in developing and training the powers of the students. The addition to the Academic Department of a School of Mines, and the provision thus made for thorough instruction in chemistry, geology, mineralogy, engineering, and other branches of a kindred nature, satisfied the modern demand for practical scientific instruction. In this department young and enthusiastic professors, judiciously selected, have imparted their own energy to the ancient institution. A valuable cabinet of mineralogy has been presented to the school, chiefly by Hon. CONVERSEUS KEMBLE and G. T. STRONG, Esq., while the collection of Professor NEWBERRY, which contains many specimens that are unsurpassed, and not a few that are entirely unique, is at hand to illustrate the pre-Adamite history of the earth. It would seem, therefore, that Columbia College does not occupy the position of those who sought, 200 years ago, to bring disrepute on telescopic discovery by preaching against it from the rather wittily chosen text: "Viri Galilæi quare statis in monte spectantes?" ("Ye Galilean men, why stand ye gazing up into Heaven?") We do not find that it is one of the College statutes that the earth is only six thousand years old—nor that it is regarded as an essential part of academic orthodoxy that graduates should consider the organic remains which are discovered in rocks, to have been placed there by fortuitous concourse of the particles composing them. The doctrine of chance seems to be held to belong properly to the chair of mathematics, and the Professor of the Evidences of Religion is probably not advised to call it to aid him in accounting for the skeletons of mastodons, or the fossilized corpses of ill-starred trilobites. The just and fair conclusions of science should be accepted by every college, in these days, as resting upon a logical basis of the very same character as that upon which all the past history of the human race is established, viz., what is termed moral or probable evidence.

But Columbia College, nevertheless, apparently, protests against the doctrine of the ultra advocates of scientific culture, and refuses to allow the classical course to be superseded. In 1858, the Trustees, animated by the conviction that the study of languages, which presents the facts of mind just as the world presents those of matter, is a valuable and indispensable counterpoise to the study of matter, established the prizes, to the distribution of which we have made allusion. The first prize consists of $200; the second of $150. They are competed for by members of the Junior Class. To prevent the possibility of a student's devoting himself to the securing of one or other of these prizes, and for that purpose neglecting his other studies, it has been provided that none shall compete who have failed in a previous examination in any department. The Examiners, who are three in number, are appointed by the President of the College.

The subject-matter of the examination is to be some one entire play of ÆSCHYLUS, SOPHOCLES, or EURIPIDES, which has not formed any part of the regular college course. In conducting the examination the following method is adopted: The different Examiners prepare such questions as seem to them suitable, and of these a digest is made, which is printed. On the day appointed Examiners and competitors meet. Even on this occasion due regard is paid to the laws of science. It is held to be true, even by the Professor of Greek, that the influence which bodies exert upon one another is inversely as the square of the distance. Hence pains are taken to reduce the former to zero, or an approximation to zero, by making the latter as great as the dimensions of the Professor's lecture-room and the number of candidates will allow.

In the olden time, when certain worthies of Scripture fame were designated to discharge some novel function, they received new names. Singularly enough, this practice is, to a limited extent, adopted among the Chinese. When a child goes for the first time to school to learn his A-B-C, he receives a fanciful name as that by which he is to be known in his new relation. In the Junior Greek prize examination a similar device was employed. Fictitious names, equal in number to the number of competitors, were written each upon a separate slip of paper. One of the slips thus inscribed was presented by a person not an Examiner to each of the competitors. Each received at the same time a blank envelope. Upon the back of the slip bearing his fictitious title he wrote his real name, put it into the envelope and sealed the same. All the envelopes were then collected and put aside for reference when a decision should be reached. The next step in the proceeding was to give every competitor a copy of the questions to be answered, together with a text book, or books, interleaved with blank leaves, precisely such from the bookseller's shelves, and of quite unadorned with those delicious interlineations entered by previous wayfarers to Parnassus, with the charitable hope that perhaps another, some forlorn and shipwrecked mariner, may find it helpful again. The text books and blank books having been received, and the fictitious names aforesaid being inscribed upon the latter, six months at once began to be busily plied. Like the laborers who wrought on the Temple of old, these builders work in silence. Monday comes (we hours have elapsed since Bonifilius began), but the Earl still reigns in Colonus, alive thereto and therefore indicate a decided rise in the temperature; "Homer" is steadily leading on his columns, they march, they will unbroken front, "Euripides" and "Æschylus" each lose a stray man and there, but they give, indications of weakness. "Sophocles" resorts to the tactics of condensation, and massed his forces in solid squares. "Creon" shows good courage, but lacks the deliberate calmness needed to secure victory. "Pindar" charged with distinguished heroism, but were so close, he others have done the other fields; in not bringing force enough to bear. Through the intervention of a neutral examiner an armistice of fifteen minutes is declared, and the energy of the combatants directed against an adjacent column of lofty-browed unfortunates who have long stood in the Arithmetic field, but the national Professor does not rise from his seat. Gaslight is called into requisition and the length of a truce is announced. The contest is over, all dismounted and sixteen volumes of reading matter are presented to the examiners for their inspection.

It may be of interest to those who are concerned in classical instructions to see the appended list of a portion of the year's examination questions. It will be seen that they are varied, comprehensive and searching.

We have taken the trouble to compare these questions with those of the Cambridge, England, classical Tripos, as given in the University Calendar for 1869, a copy of which lies by us. We find as the result of the comparison that the questions proposed in the Columbia Examination in general more difficult than those proposed to undergraduates of Cambridge.

The examination of the papers was conducted by each examiner alone. Maximum values in numbers had been assigned by all three together to each question, and each rated the answer given according to his independent judgment. On coming together and comparing results it was found that all were agreed upon the first prize-taker. Of the rest one only was far behind, and even he obtained more than two-thirds of the full marks. The other three, in fine, differed in very slight degree yet in point of classical and critical detail "Euripides" and "Æschylus" were deemed to take the lead, while, however, there seemed to be no appreciable difference between these two. Thus hence Solon proposed that the competition that the second prize be divided between them, while the others were awarded with very great honor.

On opening the sealed envelopes it was found that "Homer" was WILLIAM J. WEBBE; "Euripides," SETH LOW; and "Æschylus" FRANKLIN H. TEMPLE.

The College must be congratulated on the results of this examination. While such scholarship is manifested by her undergraduates at that of the age contestable for the Trustees' prize in Greek, there will be no reason to fear that she will recede from her long-established position as a classical college.

THE SECTARIAN SCHOOL FUND.

What the Commissioners Are Expected to Distribute it Since Dunn and is Going to Do.

Most readers of the newspapers are probably aware of the fact that among the items of the New-York City Tax Levy, that was seized up by the Tammany Ring near the close of the session of the last Legislature, and smuggled through both Houses by the combined vote of all the Democratic members and the purchased vote of some twenty renegade Republicans, was one appropriating between $200,000 and $300,000 to aid in the support of sectarian schools in this City. A bill having the same object in view was introduced into the Legislature during the fore part of the session by Senator TWEED, but the prompt exposure of the scheme through the public Press nipped it in the bud, and the bill was never brought to a vote in either House. The promoters of the scheme, however, did not abandon their design, but quietly awaited an opportunity to smuggle through the Legislature in a secret and underhanded way a measure that they could not pass on its own merits. This opportunity presented itself in the Tax Levy, which was carried through by bribery, and in which the sectarian School bill found, among many other corrupt jobs, a convenient cover. The appropriation of $200,000 for the support of sectarian schools is not regarded by the opponents of the measure as of so much importance in itself—albeit the tax payers of New-York already spend $2,000,000 per annum for the support of public schools, to which all children are admitted—but they object to the precedent, and to the principle that underlies the appropriation, which they regard (and justly) as an entering wedge for the destruction of our entire public school system. And, in point of fact, the large majority of those who sought for and urged this appropriation openly avow their hostility to the common schools of the country, and have for years been doing all in their power to break them down. Although the law (or rather, the clause in the Tax Levy) making the appropriation makes no distinction among the religious sects or denominations that are to receive its benefits, yet it is notorious that the thing was done for the benefit of the Catholics, and, in point of fact, they are the only religious denomination that ever applied to the Legislature for anything of the kind.

The item in the Tax Levy authorizing the appropriation reads as follows:

SEC. 8. Hereafter an annual sum equal to twenty per cent on the entire moneys received for said City in lieu, to be distributed under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Instruction by the Board of Education of said City, (who are empowered shall be paid from such amount,) for the support of schools, educating children gratuitously in said City who are not provided for by the common school system, excepting therefrom schools receiving contributions for their support from the City Treasury.

In pursuance of this law our new Board of Education, as is generally known, appointed NATHANIEL JARVIS, Esq., Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, the Commissioner, or "officer" as the law terms him, who is to distribute the fund. The selection is a very good one, and if anything could reconcile the public to a law which is bad in principle, and, if persisted in, will be destructive in practice, it would be the appointment of a man like Mr. JARVIS, who is a gentleman of the strictest integrity, free from political partizanship or religious prejudice, and who will see to it that the fund is justly and impartially distributed. It will be perceived by the loose wording of the law that almost everything relating to its mode of execution is left at the discretion of the Commissioner. It does not state on what basis or by what apportionment the fund is to be distributed, nor does it designate the schools who are to share in the bounty, but leaves the Commissioner to gather his information as best he may, and then distribute the moneys as his own conscience and sense of justice may dictate. As will be seen at a glance, the task of the Commissioner is by no means an easy one to perform. He is liable to all sorts of imposition from those who seek to obtain a share of the fund. Some broken-down pedagogue or dilapidated preacher who gives gratuitous instruction now and then to a handful of street urchins, may put in his claim to a share of the fund, and count up the number of his pupils (he includes every newsboy whom he may have stopped in the street, and asked to recite the Ten Commandments while he purchased a fourth edition of the Herald. In fact, if the law is kept in force we may expect, in a year or two, to see "schools educating children gratuitously" springing up on every street corner; and then we can dispense with our cumbrous public school system entirely—which, by the way, is just what the projectors of the scheme would like.

In order to avoid deception and the presentation of bogus claims, as far as possible, Mr. JARVIS has commenced his labors by issuing blank certificates to be filled up by those claiming a share in the distribution, wherein they are required to state the names and residences of the Managers and Trustees of the schools under their charge, where they are located, the number of pupils over four and under twenty-one years of age who have instructed gratuitously during the past year, the number of scholars at present attending said schools, the average attendance of the year, the number of days the school was kept open, and a variety of other information, all of which the applicant is obliged to swear to under oath. These blanks can be had of Mr. JARVIS, at his room in the City Hall, any time during office hours. Lest any one should enter a share through ignorance of his rights, the Commissioner has advertised the new law in all the daily papers of the City and in every religious newspaper, both Jew and Gentile, except the New-York Tablet, which declined to publish the advertisement unless paid in advance—terms with which the Commissioner, who has no funds, as yet, to his disposition, could not comply. All applications for shares of the fund are required to be made before the 15th of August next, and the blanks filled up and sworn to, as before mentioned. It is now the intention of the Commissioner to make a visit to each school to ascertain, by personal inspection, what kind of an educational establishment it is, and whether deserving or not of a share in the distribution.

The total sum to be distributed each year, according to the new law, is $200,000, that being twenty per cent of the entire money received during the year 1868.

As will be seen, the law neglects to fix the compensation of the Commissioner, and does not delegate authority to any one else to fix it. It might, perhaps, be argued that the Board of Education has the authority by implication, but in view of the uncertainty of the case, Mr. JARVIS says he shall not put in any bill for services, but do the work for nothing. He expects to be found fault with anyhow; but as he did not ask for the position, does not want it, and gets no pay for it, he hopes at least to escape the censure awarded to some who took good office from pecuniary and selfish motives.

THE CRAIG-SPRAGUE CASE.

The Motion for a New Trial Denied—A Remittur for $40,000 of the Verdict Entered, and Judgment Given for the Balance—The Contumacious Witness still in Jail.

From the Cincinnati Commercial.

CINCINNATI, Saturday, July 3.

Yesterday the motion for a new trial in the case of CRAIG vs. SPRAGUE, for breach of promise, was argued in the Circuit Court of Dupage County, at Wheaton, Ill., Judge WILCOX presiding. The attendance of spectators was larger than at any previous period of the term, but was marked by the absence of ladies.

On the opening of the Court at 2:30 P. M. the judge took up the several objections of the defendant's counsel as to whether the verdict should be quashed and dealt with them seriatim. With regard to the first, namely that the verdict for $40,000 was against law and the evidence in the case, the Court held that the verdict was not excessive or illegal, as such a one, on similar evidence, had been held good by the Superior Court. With reference to the second, to the effect that the verdict was against the instructions of the Court, the Judge held that the objection was based upon the defendant having been allowed to depose to his pecuniary condition, which, if it had not been permitted, would give the defendant the opportunity to defeat the plaintiff's person, and the bond of the contract, which he was bound to fulfill, by committing a wrong and then taking advantage of it. As to the fourth objection, namely, requiring the defendant to testify about the girl whom he had as servant, the Court ruled that it was proper to examine him and show that he was living with and supporting her, and hence was able to support a wife. Adding to the fifth objection why the verdict should be set aside which was, in effect, that the Court refused to keep the report of Dr. BUCK as to whether the defendant's attorneys knew before he came to the trial what he had to depose, the Court held that BUCK was simply a witness and that the opposite course would not affect the case. Adding to the sixth objection, namely, that of closing the case before the testimony on Saturday had been concluded, the Court said he could not compel a witness to speak what he knew. In dealing with the seventh objection, which was based upon the Court's peremptory CLARKE to testify after the case had been closed, the Judge held that it was a matter of discretion with the Court.

The Court then took up the question of excessive damages, as it referred directly to the present case. He stated that Courts would rarely ever interfere or set aside a verdict of a jury in such cases, unless it clearly appeared the verdict was the result of undue influence, prejudice or corruption; that in this case there was no appearance of any corruption on the part of the jury, and no claim of such. There appeared to be no undue influence, but he was not prepared to say there was no prejudice; the minds of the jury must have been prejudiced by the course the defendant's counsel assumed for their client, by holding him up to be a miserable and unprincipled wretch. The Court concluded by asking Mr. TOURTELLOTTE, of counsel for Miss CRAIG, if he would remit. Mr. TOURTELLOTTE agreed to remit $40,000, and the Court thereupon entered a remittur of the amount, leaving the verdict for $60,000, and overruled the motion for a new trial, entering judgment on the verdict for $60,000.

Upon the entering of the judgment Judge PATRIDGE, one of the defendant's attorneys, said he would not appeal against the decision.

Dr. BUCK, a witness in the case, appeared in Court, represented by Judge BARRY, of St. Charles, who wished, if possible, that his client should be purged from contempt. The Court examined him for half an hour, but his replies were as equivocal as heretofore. Finally, he was permitted to retire from the Court House, failure to pay a fine of $100, and his board bill at the prison. He awaits in Wheaton the Good Samaritan.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

Seven Flat Cars go Through a Bridge in Cincinnati and Louisville Short Line—Two Men Killed and Fifteen Wounded.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer, July 4.

The new Short Line or Cincinnati, Louisville and Lexington Railroad was opened to public travel last one week ago under the most favorable auspices, and since that time the road has been doing an immense passenger business. Yesterday afternoon, twelve miles south of Covington, at what is termed the Seventh Crossing of Bank Lick Creek, an accident occurred. The bridge across the stream referred to gave way beneath a construction train. Seven cars and the tender of the engine were precipitated a distance of twenty-five feet, and two men were killed and fifteen others were wounded.

The particulars of the disaster are as follows: A construction train, of which Mr. WOOD WILSON was conductor, consisting of a locomotive and eighty platform cars, left Verona about 3 o'clock P. M., to come to Covington. There were twenty-two men on it, and one of the cars was partly loaded with railroad iron. Just as the train struck the bridge the engineer felt it sink, ing under him, and putting on all the steam that he could, endeavored to get over it before it fell. He succeeded in reaching the bridge just in the middle of the structure went down with a crash, carrying to the bottom the tender and seven of the eight cars. They were all piled up in a heap in the bed of the creek, and about ten of the men were buried in the ruins. The people from the surrounding country flocked to rapidly to the scene of the catastrophe, and rendered all the aid in their power in clearing away the wreck and getting out the wounded. The following is a complete list of the killed and wounded:

KILLED.

Lee Lawson and John Neilinger, generally called Nolan. The former is a married man, and has been residing for some time in South Covington. He was a Swede. Neilinger was a resident of Cincinnati, and a German.

WOUNDED.

Patrick Callahan, brakeman, badly, residence, Covington; Frank Morgan, boy, South Covington, badly; severe cut over eye, and skull probably fractured; Jacob Fess, South Covington, arm broken; Hugh Roddy, Cincinnati, leg and head bruised; Joseph Lynch, Covington, Ky., back hurt, not dangerous; C. C. Dugan, South Covington, brakeman, bruised all over, but not dangerously injured; Frank Hess, Covington, leg severely bruised; Patrick Kane, Cincinnati, water boy, slightly; Michael Fitzpatrick, Covington, leg broken, and badly injured otherwise; Samuel Walker, Zanesville, O., dangerously; Harvey Dalton, Louisville, dangerously; Jacob Swedel, seriously; Gustav Sen, Swede; slightly; Joseph Lynch, South Covington, slightly; Wm. Powers, Covington, foot mashed.

When the news of the accident reached Covington a train was sent out, with Dr. KEARNS and MASON on board. They reached the wreck at 6 P. M., and had all the wounded placed in a car and brought to Covington, where they were transferred to the St. Elizabeth Hospital.

THE REMOR.

The bridge was a crossing of Bank Lick Creek, and twelve miles from this city. It was a little more than sixty feet in length and nearly twenty-five feet high. It was built by the Louisville Bridge Company, and was constructed of iron rafted and wood. It was on a curve of the track, and when the bridge fell the accident was at first ascribed to the train being off the track. Several theories as to the manner in which the accident occurred are given. It was stated by some that the timber jumped the track, carrying the bridge down with it. Others contended that the foundation of the bridge gave way, and that the bridge was sinking at soon as the train struck it. The same train, with twice as heavy a load, had crossed safely early in the morning.

Murder, Robbery and Arson in Indiana.

From the Louisville Courier, July 5.

At about 12 o'clock on Wednesday night, a most horrible murder was committed at Farrabee's Station, twenty miles from New-Albany, on the Louisville, New-Albany and Chicago Railroad. The depot, a large frame building, was burned. Near the depot was a store, also a wooden structure. This was also burned. The keeper of the store, Mr. WM. F. SHITZ, (formerly of New-Albany,) was murdered by the incendiaries and his body thrown into a small shed adjoining the store. When the flames were discovered by the citizens nothing was known of the terrible manner that had been committed; but in the morning the body of SHITZ was found charred and disfigured in a horrid manner. His head was bruised and with a heavy club or some similar instrument. Mr. SHITZ was sleeping in a room adjoining the store, and it is supposed he was first murdered in his bedroom, thrown into the shed, the store robbed, and the building then fired to conceal the murder. Mr. SHITZ was a man much esteemed by all who knew him. His father lives on Franklin Township, near New-Albany. Deceased had a cousin, Mr. WALTER L. SHITZ, living in New-Albany, to whose house the remains were taken. It is believed the murder, robbery and arson were committed by persons living near Farrabee Station.

Two Outlaws Shot and Killed in Hickman County, Tenn.

From the Nashville Union, July 4.

Three men, named STEVENSON, DEXTER and HATCHEL, imprisoned in the Maury County jail at Columbia, recently broke jail and escaped. Two of them, STEVENSON and HATCHEL, went to the neighborhood of STEVENSON's home in Hickman County and hid themselves in the woods. Watching his chance, STEVENSON crept out and went to a boy who was plowing in the field and by threats made him undertake to go to STEVENSON's house and get a gun from his wife

ALABAMA.

Platform of the Republicans of the Fifth Congressional District.

The Republicans of the Fifth District of Alabama have nominated Judge WILLIAM J. HARALSON, of DeKalb County, for Congress. Every county in the district was represented in the Convention; the nominee has occupied various positions of trust and honor in the State. We give the resolutions adopted by the Convention:

Resolved, by the Republicans of the Fifth Congressional District of Alabama in Convention assembled:

1. In our opinion, the issues hereafter dividing the two great political parties of the country have been forever settled, either by the sword or the ballot, the sword in the hands of the rebels, and their further discussion is idle, inutile and mischievous.

2. Respite from national peril affording opportunity, we propose to devote our energies to the work of our normal and welcome task, viz.: the development of the economic, industrial and material resources of our State.

3. We shall not regard our work as accomplished until we have secured the following among other legitimate results, viz.: Education for all, honest for the poor, opportunity for the unfortunate, equity, based on the intelligent and universal power conferred upon the people, and equitable taxation, equitable elections in local navigation removed, railroads constructed wherever needed, and the almost universal system of free labor established for the busy hum of industry and the glad song of emancipated labor.

4. As Republicans, fully recognizing and indorsing the great principle that all Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and believing the national authority now so thoroughly established, as to be undisputed and undisputable, and that immediate amnesty are harmless except for old secession, we earnestly recommend to the National Congress the universal amnesty of all the late rebellion, and the removal of all disabilities incurred as a consequence of participation in that crime.

5. Believing honesty, capacity, availability and patriotism to be the qualifications of a good Congressman, we present our candidate for Congress before the people of this district as in our opinion the one man who, while by nature adapted and with the thousand parts of the district, and likely to secure the favorable notice and consideration of his compeers, is at the same time able and willing to accomplish more for the advancement of the moral, agricultural and material interests of Alabama than any other available man.

Tragedy at Calvert, Texas.

A correspondent of the Galveston News, writing from Bryan, Texas, June 21, says:

"On Friday last, the town of Calvert was the scene of a horrible tragedy. The facts of the case, as I can gather them from various sources, are: There has been for over a year a misunderstanding existing between a notorious character by the name of BEN BROWN and Dr. MAXWELL. On Friday last, BROWN, with a party of about forty desperadoes, rode into the town of Calvert, all armed to the teeth, for the purpose, as they avowed, of killing Dr. MAXWELL and two friends of his. When MAXWELL was told of their intention, he mounted his horse and rode down the street alone to meet Brown and his party. When he had passed them, the order was given to fire, and there was a volley of about a hundred shots fired at him. He and his horse were completely riddled with bullets. Not content with their work, they stabbed the body several times as he lay dead or dying.

Dr. MAXWELL was a young physician of high standing and doing a large practice in that vicinity, and was looked upon by all who knew him as a high-toned and honorable gentleman, and a universal favorite throughout the country. He leaves a mother and little daughter (now in Louisiana) to mourn his untimely death. The friends of MAXWELL, whose lives were also threatened, took refuge in a room on the second floor of a house, armed themselves with guns and pistols and defied the Brown party to attack them; but the desperadoes left the place without distur torication, and died in a cell while under arrest. He was an Irishman, aged 40 years.

ADAM GIMMELL, the saloon keeper who was stabbed with a sword-cane at No. 134 Bank-street, by his brother-in-law, THEODOR SALLEN, on the 26th ult., died yesterday from the wound received. Coroner ROLLINS will hold an inquest to-day. The accused is now under arrest.

THE WEST-SIDE NUISANCE.

Continuation of the Examination by the Health Authorities—Testimony for and against the New-York Rendering Company.

The examination in the matter of the complaint against the New-York Rendering Company was continued yesterday at No. 309 Mulberry-street, before the Referee of the Board of Health, Mr. SETH G. HAWLEY.

Dr. Morris Morris, Assistant Sanitary Superintendent, deposed that he had examined into the operations of the Company; was aware of the manner in which dead animals, &c., were taken away before the Company commenced operations; the refuse, offal, &c., from markets, butchers' stands, &c., were brought to the dock to be disposed of, and they were all very offensive; the matter laid all day festering in the sun; the Rendering Company established a dock with two vessels to destroy all this by rendering, and set up an apparatus which removed the cause of the offence by rapidly disposing of the matter thus collected; after this these accumulations were immediately removed, and have not been there since; the apparatus has removed the nuisance to a great extent; has had prolonged inspection of the place, and has stood over the boilers from the time they were filled till the time they were discharged; the Company, in his opinion, had destroyed the nuisance as much as possible; there was no intentional disregard of the orders of the Board of Health; disinfectants have been used very liberally; these odors cannot now be detected at the distance of 150 feet from the dock; there are other establishments in that neighborhood, where fat-boiling and other offensive businesses are conducted; these were going on all night, and deleterious gases escape from them; there is no city in the Union where such work is done with less offence than here; has visited other cities and seen this; the gases from decomposing animal matter would be more combustible than those arising from fresh material; has examined other apparatus, and found them to destroy the odors; sulphureted hydrogen is generated.

Colonel Emmons Clark, Clerk of the Board of Health, was the next witness. He resided on the Hudson River for the last ten years, and had passed close to the works before this Company operated there, and there is much less offence since that time than before; there are odors which escape, but he could not tell where they came from; as there are a number of other establishments there; since the Company commenced operations, the odors have escaped only occasionally, and he had smelled none within the past ten days.

Dr. Estelle Harris, the Sanitary Superintendent, deposed that the present method of the New-York Rendering Company, compared with previous methods, was entirely different; that there were no grounds of comparison except the storage, &c.; he could not appear as an advocate for either side; the former methods were dependent upon transportation to a greater extent than at present; the rendering into grease and removal of scrap took place in former times in different unbuilt portions of the City; at the present time there is no transportation further than Thirty-eighth-street; all the rendering, &c., is done there; in former times boats threw the refuse into the sea, and offended people at the water side; in 1865 and at various other times, he had occasion to report officially these nuisances, which are now abated; even in Winter time this was offensive, and this was the result of negligence and carelessness in the storage; he thought that Health authorities could have prevented this; the Rendering Company had exercised great vigilance, except in some points which were open to blame certainly, but still the blamable matter was not in the dark; the accumulation has been offensive, but this has greatly abated under this Company's operations; the methods did not provide for careful storage; there is, however, a wide difference between the two; under this boiling, handling, &c., was done away from the City, while the present method occurs within 1,000 feet of Eleventh-avenue; have examined the works at least 100 times; the present method is free, with one exception, from everything offensive; the nuisance; the exception is in taking the residuum, after out of the tanks after the fat is pumped out, and in the handling of the scrap the Company has met with the greatest difficulty; disinfectants have been used to deodorize scraps; there is some doubt at times theoretically as to the escape of gases, except when the furnace is at full heat, and then there is not much probability of the gases escaping combustion; as a general thing he believes the gases are completely consumed, although practically there is a doubt; has no knowledge of any better apparatus than that now in use for the combustion of gases; and it does this as well as it possibly can be done.

The cross-examination hinged upon the means of improving the establishment by removing scrap at once, by tanking putrid material; it is, however, a mere question of time, as he said it only on two occasions, by more thorough disinfection, but is doubtful whether this can be brought to thorough perfection; it is difficult to do away with offensiveness entirely; although it is now reduced to a small matter to what it was a year ago; it is practicable to do away entirely away with it, but it will cost money.

This concluded the testimony on behalf of the Company, and the witnesses for the complainants were then examined.

Michael Kernan, of West corner Thirty-seventh-street and Eleventh-avenue, deposed that bushels of offal, &c., came from Brooklyn and were there all night; had to shut his windows whenever this occurred; he produced a memorandum showing different dates when the smell was most offensive.

Cross-examined—Lived there seven years, but had no deaths in his family during that time; keeps a liquor store there; the employes of the other fat-melting and gut establishments drink his liquor and live; the smell from these establishments does not annoy him in the least.

Patrick Amer, of Thirty-fourth-street, smelt two kinds of smell from Thirty-eighth-street, one a fatty and the other a putrid animal smell; he had visited Thirty-ninth-street, and the smell was horrible there.

Mr. Arthur G. Johnson, of Thirty-fifth-street, Wm. Johnson, of Thirty-fourth-street, Officer Francis McDonald, and a number of other witnesses were examined, and all appeared to agree as to the character of the odors exhaled from the establishment. Mr. Wm. Johnson admitted that after investigating the matter, instead of seeing the other places, his opinion, which had previously been averse to the Company, had greatly changed.

The examination was finally adjourned until Thursday morning at 11 o'clock.

THE LATE RAILROAD COLLISION.

Inquest by Coroner Keenan—Testimony of the Eye-witnesses—No Decision Yet.

Coroner KEENAN commenced an inquest yesterday in the case of JABOB CARSON, the boy who was killed by the collision of a Belt Line car with a train on the Harlem Railroad, at the corner of Fifty-ninth-street and Fourth-avenue, on the 28th ult., as already reported. The following evidence was elicited:

Henry R. Holloway, of Dover Plains, N. Y., testified: I am engineer on the New-York and Harlem Railroad line; on the 28th ult. I had charge of the engine attached to a freight train; it is about twenty minutes past five o'clock P. M. the train was coming into New-York, and was just past Sixtieth-street, when I saw a team of horses about to cross Fourth-avenue, and gave a whistle; I reversed my engine at once and whistled for brakes; I did all that I could in about ten seconds; the car came on and nearly crossed the tracks, when I came up I struck the near end of it, and knocked off the back platform; the horses were on the track before I saw them; I was keeping a lookout all the time; we were going at the usual rate of speed; the buildings between Lexington and Fourth avenues would hinder me from seeing a car or other vehicle while they were in Fifty-ninth-street.

Thomas Elliott, of Dover Plains, N. Y., testified: I am conductor for the Harlem Railroad Company and had charge of freight train No. 2, going south on the 28th ult.; we were coming down on that day at the usual rate of speed through Fourth-avenue, when between Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth streets, I think, I heard the engineer blow for brakes; then the train stopped the hind end being about Fifty-eighth-street; I got out and went back and found a boy and a man lying on the ground at Fifty-ninth-street; deceased was lying between the two tracks; the man was lying on the west of the track; I know nothing further regarding the accident; we have seventeen minutes from Harlem to Forty-second-street, and that is the only regulation in regard to speed that I know of.

Isaac W. Woolley, of No. 305 Fourth-avenue testified: On the 28th ult., at about a quarter past five o'clock, I was on corner of Fifty-eighth-street and Lexington-avenue, doing some mason work; the first thing that attracted my attention was the whistling of the locomotive; I looked toward Fourth-avenue and Fifty-ninth-street, and saw one of the cars of the Belt line just about to cross; I think the horses were on the track; the front of the car just about to come on the track; the locomotive was then about half a block distant from the car; the small car passed on and the locomotive reached it just in time to strike the hind platform and break it partly off; the locomotive passed on opposite where I was walking and then stopped.

The case will be resumed to-day.

The Pleasant Club.

This branch of the American Institute met yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock, at the Cooper Institute. Hon. N. C. ELY presided. The first topic to which attention was directed was a beautiful photograph of a century plant, sent to the Club by E. A. PRIOR, Rochester, N. Y., who wrote that this plant, now in full bloom in his grounds, is seventy years old, is thirty feet in circumference, sixteen and a half feet high and has now 16,000 blossoms. Numerous letters were read from correspondents in different parts of the country, some seeking and others communicating agricultural or horticultural information.

Strawberries were touched upon, and the conclusion in regard to runners was, that if fruit is desirable the runners should be cut off as often as they appear; but if new plants are wanted, the runners should be permitted to grow.

Mr. Bowen Woods, of Long Island, then addressed the Club on Southern agriculture. He found in most localities of the South that the people are ready to extend a cordial welcome to Northerners who desire to settle among them. He gave highly encouraging accounts of the agricultural and horticultural advantages of the Southern States. He stated that although the season is unusually backward, the promise of excellent crops is eminently encouraging.

Several kinds of black-cap raspberries were shown and compared with the new "Westchester" black-cap, which has just been introduced as a superior variety of this kind of fruit. A committee that had previously been designated to go to Tarrytown and examine the "Westchester" in its original locality, reported that they consider this variety an excellent acquisition to our small fruits, and quite superior to the Doolittle black-cap raspberry.

The Club then adjourned for one week.

RITUALISM AND INSANITY.

A Lady Adjudged to be Insane Asks for a Re-hearing—Ritualism in a New Phase.

A case came before Judge CARDOZO yesterday which promises to be of more than usual importance. It appears that on the 5th of May last, at Waterloo, in this State, one Mrs. CAROLINE C. ALLEN, the petitioner in these proceedings, was declared by a jury, after a prolonged hearing, to have been at that time a person of unsound mind, and that she had been in that condition for the three years previous to May, 1869. The proceedings at Waterloo were taken in pursuance of the statute of this State in such cases provided; but Mrs. ALLEN, her friends and counsel being dissatisfied with the result of the trial, as well as with some of the features and incidents attending it, a fresh proceeding was resolved upon. They claim that even if there ever were reasons for the decree, those reasons no longer exist; that Mrs. ALLEN, the petitioner, is now of as sane mind as any one. Hence an application was made to this Court to have the petitioner restored, by a decree of the Court, to the liberty of her person and the control of her property.

The case was argued by Messrs. GEORGE SEWARD, R. D. SEWARD and J. R. THE BUCKE for the petitioner, and by Messrs. PRITCHARD and BILL for the respondent. Mr. SEWARD stated the above facts, and also that the writ de lunatico was sued out in Seneca County some months since, at the instance of Rev. CHARLES D. ALLEN, of the Episcopal Church, who is a son of the petitioner, Mrs. ALLEN. He said the mother is now and has never was in the lunatic, he belongs, said counsel, to the Ritualistic, or High Church, and Rev. CHARLES D. ALLEN is a minister in the Low Church, so called; he is afraid that his mother will join one of the sisterhoods and convey her property, which is considerable, to that particular church of the Ritualists, and thus that he will be cut off with a very small share at her death. To show that, whatever may have been the condition of her mind at the time of the inquisition at Waterloo, she is now in a sane state of mind, the counsel produced affidavits from Dr. A. Bloomer, Physician-in-Chief of the Bloomingdale Asylum, Drs. STRONG and PAINE, and JAMES HAGY; also the affidavits of friends and acquaintances, such as Admiral FARRAGUT, Mrs. VIRGINIA L. FARRAGUT, his wife, Mrs. A. G. JAMESON, Dr. Francis CHEEVER and others, who testify to her remarkable intelligence, that she is coherent in conversation, and her conduct is becoming that of a reasonable person. Counsel insisted that this is something more than an ordinary case of a lady seeking to put her mother in the Lunatic Asylum, and keeping her there as long as he saw it was for his interest to do so. This case, if it ever came to trial in this City, would develop a new phase of the Ritualistic trouble in the Episcopal Church. It was something more than a mere suit on the part of the heir to get the property after his mother's death. It is claimed that this mother "bows at the sacred name in the Creed and in the Gloria, and that she attends daily early prayers at Trinity Church." It was such things as these that the ladies of Geneva, Seneca County, objected to, said counsel, and they all combined to fight against her. If the Court would give this case a careful scrutiny it would be seen that the petitioner was entitled to be restored to her liberty and to the control of her property. The Court, he hoped, would not allow the judgment rendered in Seneca County was a reason why this, the only remedy which was open to them, should be carefully considered. They were willing that Mrs. ALLEN should be examined by medical experts, and then it could be ascertained beyond all doubt whether she is a case of an insane delusion. What they now asked was that an order be made directing a commission of medical experts to examine the petitioner, or otherwise that the Court direct a jury to hear and determine the question. It would be no difficult matter, and it is of the highest importance that if this lady is of sound mind and understanding, as they insist she is, that then she should at once have not only her personal freedom, but the control of her estate. Counsel said he had two complaints to make of Judge JOHNSON, who presided at the former trial. That Judge was upright, kind-hearted and capable. But for some reason the case in Waterloo was prejudged. There was much incorrect standard in the trial, not only in Seneca County, but in the counties adjoining. Owing to some circumstances, the jurors who tried the case and found Mrs. ALLEN to be of unsound mind were not impartial.

The application was opposed, for the reason that the affidavits were made on grounds no stronger than those which were submitted on the trial of the issue before the jury. There was no sufficient proof that any change had taken place in the condition of Mrs. ALLEN which would warrant the Court in granting a rehearing of her case.

The Judge took the papers and will determine whether he will hear the case personally or send it before a jury or a referee.

COMMON PLEAS—GENERAL TERM.

Before First Judge Daly and Judges Brady and Barrett.

THE MECHANICS' LIEN DOES APPLY TO SCHOOL-HOUSES.

Richard D. Brinkerhoff vs. The Board of Education, the School Officers of the Fourteenth Ward, the Mayor of New-York, et al.—This action was commenced by the plaintiff to enforce a lien alleged to have been acquired by him as a sub-contractor upon a school-house in Forty-second-street. The case was referred to E. F. Hoch, Esq., who, as referee, found that the work had been done in conformity with the contract, but that, owing to the peculiar provisions of the same, no valid lien could be put upon the building. The plaintiff appealed, and the decision of the General Term. On the argument here the case was argued by Mr. A. J. DITTENHOEFER for the plaintiff, by Mr. A. B. Lawrence, Jr., and the plaintiff by Mr. E. G. Ketchum. In his sixth paragraph Lawrence had the bold position that "the building in question, being a portion of the property of the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, the provisions of the act of the Legislature of 1863, commonly called the Lien law, did not apply." In the decision of the Court the novel position is sustained.

Justice Daly said: The construction of a long and able opinion says: "I think the Lien law (New-York Lien law) is that the security contemplated by the law may be obtained upon the building upon which the labor was bestowed or the materials furnished, if the land and building would yield and satisfy a judgment in an ordinary civil action, but not otherwise. That we are not justified in holding that the Legislature meant this particular kind of a credit, that property belonging to public officers, and the right to sell there to satisfy the debts, which the Legislature has expressly said shall be paid, was intended to be exempt from all lien. The terms, which extends such structures upon the grounds of public necessity, supplied at public sale, are as in effect any other property, absolute, and if all other property is exempt and separated from the structure of such a right, he must be satisfied, as I concluded also, in the absence of any provisions, that I was warranted in holding that the Legislature meant that his case should be an exception to the operation of a general law, having the effect of a public act." The erection and maintaining of school-houses in the City for public education is imposed as a duty upon the City by statute. Their erection, maintenance and government is regulated by numerous and minutely detailed provisions. They are by law vested to a public use, and, therefore, come within the operation of the rule directly considered. The judgment is affirmed. Brady, J., concurred; Barrett, J., dissented.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before Judge Sutherland.

The June term was formally opened yesterday, when a number of petit jurors were selected for the trial of criminal business. The impaneling of a Grand Jury was dispensed with, owing to the fact that there is one already sitting in the Court of Over and Terminer.

POLICE COURTS.

The Tombs—Dowling, Justice.

LARCENIES BY A SERVANT.

Mrs. Della Smith, of No. 128 Sixth-avenue, caused the arrest of Anna Reilly, aged 18, a native of Poughkeepsie and a domestic, on a charge of having stolen $135 worth of clothing, on the 11th ult., while in her employ. Mrs. Mary McLaughlin, of No. 80 West Fourth-street, also charged the prisoner with having stolen two black silk dresses, valued at $100, at the same time. The prisoner had visited Leavitt-st. Anna confessed her guilt in both cases, when she was fully committed for trial in default of bail.

A SHOPLIFTER.

Elizabeth O'Brien entered the store of Henry M. Maloney, at No. 661 Broadway, yesterday afternoon, and purchased a quantity of purchasing goods. Soon after her departure the proprietor missed a dozen pairs of pants, valued at $36, had been stolen. Search was made for Elizabeth, and the property found in her possession. She was therefore committed for her trial.

BOLD THEFT OF MONEY.

While George H. Ferris, a boy, was counting cash yesterday at No. 22 South William-st., Mr. Hoyt, a lawyer, came in, and a native of Boston, came up behind him and stole $135, with which he endeavored to escape. The boy pursued the thief, however, in arresting him, and recovered all of the money. Miller was held to answer the charge at the General Sessions.

TUESDAY, July 6—P. M.

The Wall-street markets opened steady after the FOURTH OF JULY Holidays for Money and Stocks, but on lower rates for Gold, the July Gold Interest on the Public Debt of the United States, at thus far paid out, proving a larger supply than speculative buyers were willing to take at last week's prices. The sales, which closed 137 ⅞ cent. on Saturday night, opened weak 136½ ⅞ cent., and fell off in the course of the day to 135⅞@136 @135⅞@136@135⅞@136⅛ ⅞ cent. The market had no support from the foreign Exchanges for the Cunard steamer sailing to-morrow, as Bills were in good supply at rates below the Specie shipping point. The Bank of Montreal was a free drawer at 109¾ 60-days London, and other Banks were ready to accept the same rate, although there were exceptions by way of settling London credits, or where particular signatures were wanted, at 109⅝ ⅞ cent.

The feeling in the money market improved up to 1 o'clock P. M., and the prevailing rates were 10 ⅞ cent. per annum @ 1-16 of 1 ⅞ cent. per day to the Stock Brokers. At a later hour the machinery of last week for making a higher money market in front of the Exchange was again put in motion, and the same parties caused the extra difference of ⅛ ⅞ cent. per day to be quoted, and in some instances paid for carrying over stocks until to-morrow. This was after most of the general lenders of the Street had accepted lower terms and suffered the market to be tending to ease. The parties who caused Money to be bid up after 1 o'clock were active in the Railway market, and prices on the New-York and Western list were borne down with much confidence to the extent of 1¼@2½ ⅞ cent. from the first sales of the morning. The general list appeared near the close of the day to be under a very decided bearish influence. The State Bonds were steadier and the Public Funds of the United States comparatively firm on a slight offering of United States 5-20s of all descriptions, and especially of the Bonds of 1867, which were borrowed and lent at cheap rates of interest for the Money advanced upon them.

In the Afternoon there was increased excitement, on the bearish side, in the Stock market, and still lower Gold than the sales reported above. The latter ran down to 135⅛ ⅞ cent., which brought in some orders to buy, and caused Exchange to leave off with more firmness, 109¾@109⅞ for 60 days, London. The Public Funds, 5-20s, gave way for a brief time on the lower quotation for Gold, but the decline amounted at the very close to only ⅛ ⅞ cent on Saturday's figures for 1862s and 1867s, and ¼ ⅞ cent. on 1865s. The call on New-York Central and the Western Bonds was unusually severe and effective, for the time being, Central touching 130 ⅞ cent. at one moment, and Lake Shore 107@107¼ ⅞ cent., a difference in the former of 4 ⅞ cent. from the early morning sales, and of 2¼@3 ⅞ cent. in the latter. There was a lively time between 4 and 5 o'clock P. M. in the Long Room of the Stock Exchange, and between 5 and 6 P. M. in front of the Exchange on Broad-street. The fluctuations in the Railways were frequent and somewhat violent. The closing prices are about as follows:

The Treasury Office received in Gold and Currency $1,150,000, and paid out Gold $812,000 for Gold Interest and $482,329 Currency. Under the new Assistant Treasurer, the Washington Office has been credited up with sundry sealed packages of Coupons and Notes, (heretofore charged off from day to day,) and the balances now reported to the Press represent all the funds and coupons held in the New-York Office. The total this evening is $99,290,998, as against $90,046,005 on Saturday, July 3.

Attention is again directed to the New-York City Loan of $2,100,000 in 7 ⅞ cent. TAX Relief Bonds, advertised by Comptroller CORNELL.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The London Times, in an article yesterday on our NATIONAL ANNIVERSARY and America in general, remarked that now, after the monster Peace Festival, we, the American people, ought to be in a friendly spirit, and that such a demonstration for peace, such a condemnation of strife, as was the Jubilee, ought to have a softening effect on the most strenuous asserter of the Alabama claims.

The cable reports an unusual depression in the cotton trade at Lancashire, and the consequent suspension of several prominent firms.

Much excitement is reported in Cork over the efforts making to bring the Government to discharge the imprisoned Fenians. The Common Council of the city have passed resolutions formally calling upon the Government to release the men.

It is expected that the strike of the miners at St. Etienne, France, will soon end, and no further trouble is apprehended.

Many Republican demonstrations occurred throughout Catalonia, Spain, on Sunday and Monday.

HERRERA has resigned the Spanish Ministry of Justice.

Independence Day was celebrated in the principal cities of Europe as usual. At Vienna a banquet was given, at which Minister JAY and others made speeches. Mr. JAY proposed a toast to Baron VON BEUST.

Minister FIGUEROLA, of Spain, proposes to impose heavy penalties on those who refuse to take the new oath; to sell the patrimonial property of corporate bodies, and to take away the salaries or pensions of individuals.

GENERAL.

The officers of the army and navy of the Department of the Gulf, many of whom also served during portions of the war in the Army of the Potomac and with the Western armies, are to have their first reunion to-morrow at Long Branch. Extensive preparations have been made for their entertainment there, and some of the most famous of our military heroes, it is announced, will grace the occasion with their presence. Admiral FARRAGUT is to preside, General SHERIDAN is to respond to a toast, and there is to be a banquet on the evening of the 8th and a ball on the evening of the 9th. The place selected for the reunion is so easy of access and so pleasant to visit at this season that a large assemblage of the officers and their friends is expected.

The tidings from the Great Eastern and the new cable are most satisfactory. The latest advices are to 10 o'clock yesterday forenoon. Then the great ship had just entered "American waters."

Governor GEARY, of Pennsylvania, has signed the bill passed at the last session of the Legislature, known as the Trust bill, by the provisions of which the administration of all the trusts now confided to the management of the City of Philadelphia devolves upon a Board of Trustees appointed by the Courts of Harrisburg.

The story of the loss of the Powell Expedition in the Colorado Rapids is very generally discredited. A letter is published from Mrs. POWELL, wife of Major POWELL, the leader of the expedition, in which it is stated that no such man as RIDDON, who reports himself the sole survivor, belonged to the party, and that all the names given by him are fictitious. Mrs. POWELL has received a letter from her husband dated May 22, while RIDDON states that the party were lost on the 18th. Professor W. B. POWELL, of Peru, Ill., brother of the explorer, states his belief that the Springfield (Ill.) dispatch, purporting to be a confirmation of the reputed disaster, is a canard.

Thompson's Hotel, at Lake Mahopac, was entirely destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. All the guests escaped, and the greater portion of the furniture and baggage was saved, though in a damaged condition. The loss is estimated at about $20,000. It is thought that the fire originated from a defective flue. There were about 200 guests in the house.

Sad reports are received from Maine. The daughter of Rev. HENRY GILES, the eminent Irish lecturer and scholar, a beautiful girl of 16, was drowned at Bucksport on Saturday; two young ladies, Misses GREENLAW and CASWELL, were drowned at Booth Bay on Monday; and a boy 7 years old was shot, and probably mortally wounded, by a playmate 12 years old, in Bangor, on the 5th.

Mr. ROBERT DE GARMS, residing in Prospect-street, Rochester, on entering his house late Monday night, was shot and probably mortally wounded by a burglar.

A duel was fought at Sheridan, Kansas, a few days ago, by two men who had a quarrel on the train which brought them to the place just previously, and had concluded to settle the difficulty between them by shooting at each other. One was killed and the other was unhurt. No names are given.

The steamer Firefly, while on her way, Sunday, from Philadelphia to Cape May and the fishing banks, with an excursion party on board, was overhauled by a shot across her bows from the revenue cutter, whose officers suspected that she was bound for Cuba with recruits for the Cuban army. She was taken back to the city and detained at the Navy-yard till Monday morning, when, the authorities being satisfied that she was not destined for the island, and that her passengers were not filibusters, she was allowed to proceed on her peaceful mission. It is stated that nothing was found on board to warrant the suspicion that the Firefly was a filibustering steamer.

The Virginia election passed off yesterday without any serious trouble. The result is not definitely known as yet. Both parties claim the victory, but the WALKER ticket is probably elected.

It is proposed to form a picked nine from the several New-England colleges, to play a series of match games with the crack clubs of the country. SMITH, BURR, WELLS and ASWIN, of the Harvards, are spoken of as likely to enlist in this movement, and also HOOKER, of Yale, and KNIGHT, of Williams.

The first annual regatta of the Northwestern Boating Association will be held at Toledo, Ohio, to-morrow and next day.

A Woman's Suffrage Convention is to be held at Saratoga on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 13th and 14th inst.

The Irish Republican Convention opened in Chicago on Monday. Yesterday the platform was adopted. It declares for liberty, the freedom of Ireland, the settlement of the Alabama claims on the Sumner basis, the absorption of Canada, and against free trade.

Dr. PERLEY PEASE, a young gentleman of much promise, and son of ANSON PEASE, a prominent lawyer of Massillon, Ohio, was accidentally shot on Saturday by Mr. J. D. LOCKWOOD. No hope is entertained of his recovery.

Hon. B. F. WADE sent a telegram from San Francisco to the Secretary of the Interior, a few days ago, stating that he had been over the whole line of the Pacific Railroad, mostly by daylight, and found it to be as good as any new road ever built in this country, and that he is satisfied that the Companies mean to carry out their obligations in good faith.

A breach in the feeder of the Chemung Canal, near Corning, suspends navigation on that canal throughout for four or five days.

Two Terre Haute (Ind.) Editors, C. W. BROWN and Major O. T. SMITH, of the Saturday Evening Gazette, were shot by a policeman yesterday afternoon. The latter, it appears, made an unprovoked assault on Major SMITH, in the outset, but did not fire until SMITH had fired at him. Mr. BROWN came to his partner's aid. He was wounded severely; Major SMITH painfully but not dangerously.

The examination of General GOICURIA, the alleged organizer of the Cuban expedition, was commenced before Commissioner BETTS yesterday. Testimony was taken to show that a belligerent force was about to leave this City for Cuba; but there was nothing positive to prove that the accused was connected with it, except that he was found on board the captured steamer Waiting. The case will be continued to-day. On Monday a large number of the released filibusters visited General GOICURIA at Ludlow-street Jail. It is stated that Colonel BYRON, one of the Cuban commanders, has not escaped from the City, being secreted at the Whitney House, on Broadway.

The final business meeting for the present year of the Society of the Army of the Potomac was held yesterday at Steinway Hall. The lesser officers of the Association were chosen, and after the transaction of much business of little public interest, the Society adjourned to meet at Philadelphia, April 9, 1870.

WINIFRED PRICE, an under servant at the United States Hotel, in Fulton-street, being on bad terms with a number of the other domestics, yesterday attempted to poison them by putting laudanum into a sauce served at their dinner table.

An interesting case came up before the Supreme Court yesterday, on the application of a Mrs. CAROLINE C. ALLEN, who has been declared by a jury of Seneca County to be of unsound mind. She now asks a rehearing for alleged informalities on the trial, and also for the reason that what certain divines regard as insanity in the mode of worship in the Episcopal Church is with her a sincere and pious custom. The petitioner has asked for a rehearing in this City. The Court made no decision.

The Oyer and Terminer adjourned yesterday over to Thursday, there being neither jurors nor witnesses in attendance.

The Court of Common Pleas, at General Term, has decided that the Mechanics' Lien law does not apply where the claim is against the City and the Board of Education, to recover for work done or materials furnished in the erection of a school-house.

The Woman's Suffrage Association met yesterday afternoon at No. 49 East Twenty-third-street. The principal question discussed was whether woman's property should be taxed when she has no voice in the Government.

The investigation of complaints against the New-York Rendering Company for alleged offensive method of conducting business, was continued yesterday before the referee of the Board of Health. Volumes of testimony were taken on both sides, after which an adjournment for two days was agreed upon.

The Farmers' Club met yesterday afternoon and discussed various topics, of interest to tillers of the soil and those engaged in horticultural pursuits.

The June term of the Court of General Sessions was commenced yesterday.

Democratic Policy as Expounded by Tammany.

When Tammany speaks the Democracy are expected to listen. The ground it occupies is in a party sense holy ground. Its idols are the objects of abject party worship, and when the priests who minister at its altar speak in its name, the faithful hearken and obey. What the Vatican is to the Catholic Church, Tammany is to the party it rules. It makes or unmakes authority at pleasure. A year ago it nominated SEYMOUR in spite of all opposition, and it is all the time accumulating forces to control other nominations when the period for making them returns. The utterances of such a power are never wholly devoid of significance. They are especially noticeable now, when the more thoughtful of the organs are urging the necessity of reconstructing its policy and adopting issues suited to the time.

Those who hoped that Tammany would give heed to the warning words of its ablest journals must, however, confess themselves disappointed. It has spoken oracularly, as usual, and by the mouths of great men. TWEED, and GARVIN, and STOCKTON, and MILLER, and OAKEY HALL, with HOFFMAN in an epistolary form,—who shall gainsay their right to express the aspirations and to propound the purposes of Tammany and its worshippers? To whom shall we look for words of Democratic wisdom, if not to them? But we look in vain. The oracles are talkative, indeed, even wordy, but they say nothing concerning new issues. They praise and scold by turns, but to the protests against all attempts to perpetuate old ideas and old management, they offer no direct response. Indirectly they respond by parading with more than ordinary formality the relics hitherto worshipped by the party, and pompously echoing the ancient dogmas of its priesthood. Tammany, in fact, has availed itself of the opportunity to rebuke the suggestions of those who would reform and liberalize the party, and to show that its plans and tenets have undergone no change. It still clings to the lost cause.

Mr. ALEX. H. STEPHENS made himself miserable lately by disinterring the skeleton of the war, and calculating the capacity of galvanic forces to give back flesh and life. Men wondered where and how long the Vice-President of the Confederacy had slept that he failed to comprehend the moral of events which every wide-awake child may understand. But Jersey has eclipsed Georgia. STEPHENS is out-done by STOCKTON. For though STEPHENS bemoans the fate of the States Rights creed and sees no hope for liberty except in another revolution, he has learned enough to rebuke the anti-negro madness of the Georgia Democracy. STOCKTON, on the contrary, has learned nothing. He preaches the philosophy which went down with the rebellion. He finds his only happiness in the contemplation of the past. He paraphrases the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions as the ne plus ultra of Democratic wisdom. The present has for him no charm, no consolation, and one glance at the future that shall know not Tammany fills him with despair. But for a faint hope that time will pause in her course to accommodate Tammany, that the work of the war may by some demoniac dispensation be reversed, and that the darkness of Jersey may one day spread over the land—Senator STOCKTON would of all men be most miserable. He is nearly so now, and other great men of Tammany are not much better.

The sprightly Mayor exerts himself to cast a gleam of light over the scene. He could not be dismal if he tried. And having no respect for the ancient landmarks and traditions of the party, he endeavored to recall attention to the things of the present and the possibilities of the future. The States Right doctrine he banished to Jericho; and the Fifteenth Amendment, which haunts the dreams and oppresses the wakeful hours of STOCKTON, he passed in disrespectful silence. He alone aspired to be the prophet of a new Democratic era. But the effort was that of a man who has no heart in the business, and would much prefer the creation of another "Humpty Dumpty" to the construction of a party platform. He made a dash at Cuba, and danced a hornpipe on the deck of the Alabama; declared war against Spain in behalf of the Cubans, and shook his fists at England after the manner approved by the Fenians. More than this in the direction of new issues Mr. OAKEY HALL did not attempt. What worse could do toward pledging his party to a double foreign war, he did; and there in his hands the subject of policy ended.

We do not propose to judge the talk of Tammany by the standard applicable to a nominating convention. The occasion which brought these bright and shining lights of the Democracy together was not one suitable to the formal declaration of a new policy. Of the fullness of the heart, however, the mouth speaketh. And when the guides and philosophers of a powerful party meet to exchange ideas, the current of speech naturally flows in the channel of habitual thought and cherished purpose. From this point of view, the speeches of Monday derive whatever suggestiveness they possess. They reveal the ideas uppermost in the mind of the Democratic Party. They indicate the quality of the nutriment on which it feeds, the tone and temper it cultivates, and the aims with which it associates expectations of returning power. In this respect they are unfavorable to the schemes for remolding the policy of the party, and for installing in its councils the more liberal leaders whom influential journals, pronounced and consistent in their fealty, recognize as essential to its success. Tammany, it is evident, will retain its idols, and to the extent of its influence will exact from the party a blind adherence to the policy which the World of this City and the Post of Boston are anxious to repudiate.

Prussia as a Naval Power.

Nothing in the history of Modern Europe is more remarkable than the sudden development of Prussia into a Great Power—in the actual, and not merely in the diplomatic sense of the term. It is but three years ago since the European world was electrified by the sudden revelation of the fact that Prussia was no longer a second-class Power, tolerated formally rather than accepted as an equal by France, England and the other hereditary "Great Powers" of Europe, but a nation that could not only hold her own in a great war, but which could absolutely crush a formidable military Power, by sheer strength, in one-tenth of the time it formerly took to settle a national duel. And, although the weakness of Austria, through her obstinate adherence to exploded military traditions caused her to fall an easy victim to her younger rival, it was still manifest that the splendid system of military organization which had converted the entire male population of Prussia into a standing army, without unduly drawing upon the productive resources of the nation, and the judgment and quickness displayed by the Prussian Government in seizing upon and adopting the latest improvements in the science of warfare, had made Prussia the most formidable military Power on the Continent. The overwhelming power of the breech-loader, practically exemplified at Sadowa, was at once recognized throughout Europe, and even France, with her splendid traditions and gigantic armaments, felt a shiver of alarm from which she has scarcely yet recovered. And now that the entire population of North Germany has been practically brought within the reach of the Prussian recruiting sergeant, it is scarcely an exaggeration to call her the greatest military Power in Europe.

But it is clear that Prussia, under the virtual rule of a statesman like Count BISMARCK, is not content to remain a military Power and nothing else. The scarcely concealed object of Prussia in forcing on the war with Denmark was the acquisition of maritime advantages which would enable her to attain the position of a great naval Power, and with characteristic energy Count BISMARCK has not neglected a single available opportunity of adding to the naval strength of his country. The most powerful iron-clad in the world, built for the Sultan, and offered to the English Government, was snapped up by the ever-watchful BISMARCK; two other iron-clads, of almost equal strength, have since been added to the Prussian fleet; all that engineering skill can do has been done in designing a second Portsmouth or Cherbourg in the newly-acquired possession on the Baltic, and we now learn that Russia regards the naval preponderance of Prussia in that sea with undisguised jealousy and alarm, while the English papers are already beginning to speak of her as a formidable rival in the supremacy of the European seas, so long claimed as the unquestioned perquisite of the ideal "Britannia." And at a time when every nation may be said to have a fresh start in naval matters, this perturbation among the older naval Powers is not unnatural. What the ultimate effect on the European "balance of power" may be remains to be seen; but there can be no doubt that hereafter Prussia will be able to exercise an influence in European affairs at large scarcely inferior to that hitherto possessed by France and England. Even now neither of these Powers would much relish the spectacle of the Prussian iron-clad fleet taking an experimental cruise in the Channel or the Mediterranean. For the future, we fancy, the views of Prussia with regard to little family difficulties between European nations, will be consulted with a good deal more deference than has formerly been the case.

What is Needed in the Country.

We give place this morning to a letter from an occasional correspondent in the country, in which the writer, in a rather facetious vein, discusses the plans lately devised by the Tribune for securing honest candidates for the State Legislature in the rural districts, and sets forth the practical difficulties in the way of putting them into operation. There is much force in what our correspondent says. We agree with him in believing the plan of meeting secretly, for the purpose of naming candidates, to be unwise and impracticable. Our friends in the country have already a much better method than this for securing the nomination of proper men, and they have only to carry it out to secure the best results. There are no close political corporations of any kind in the country. There the Republican organizations, unlike those in this City, are open to all persons who belong to the Republican Party, and all members of that party are free to participate in caucuses and primaries for the selection of delegates to nominating conventions. If, therefore, the rank and file of the party desire that honest men should be nominated, they have only to attend these preliminary meetings, and by voice and vote secure the selection not only of "leading" but of "honest" men as delegates to the Conventions. Let this be done, and there will be no need of "Citizens' Associations" in the counties to assist in defeating dishonest candidates. The great body of Republican voters are in favor of honest men and honest measures; and they have only to be true to themselves, and to make use of the simple and practicable party machinery already in existence among them, to secure the prevalence of their views, without resorting to untried and perhaps impracticable measures. They have the matter in their own hands. We "entreat" our Republican friends in the country to consider it seriously. Let every member of the party conscientiously attend the caucuses, and secure the election of honest delegates to the nominating conventions. Nothing else is required; and the Republican Party has the right to expect of every member the performance of this simple duty.

A word as to Citizens' Associations in the counties. The organization at whose head stands the name of the venerable PETER COOPER, has accomplished an immense amount of good in this City, by keeping down taxation and preventing the consummation of dishonest jobs. Its service in this respect cannot be too highly estimated. At the same time, it is, we think, open to question whether the establishment of such societies in the country will lead to any good results that cannot be equally well secured by simpler, more familiar and more practicable methods.

Commencement Oratory.

The era of Commencements is here, and we note, or surmise, a decline in the glories of Commencement Oratory. Take Harvard, for example. Once there was Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin in abundance on the programme of performance, besides four or five good hours of English. Now, we find, at the late Commencement, eight English parts comprising the whole affair. Nor was this surely for lack of students. No less than 108 were graduated in the class, which gives us one in thirteen or fourteen of those who desired, or were allowed, to distinguish themselves as orators.

And such subjects! The first was "A Famine in India;" the second, the "Ocean Telegraph;" the third, "The New Philosophy of Chemistry," and so on. How is a man to let the American eagle soar, how is he to soar himself, on the wings of fancy, with such themes? The second subject might perhaps afford some chance for "brilliant" oratory—but to guard against that, it appears to have been expressly limited to the "Ocean Telegraph as illustrating the practical bearings of theoretical science." This, too, has been the way matters have been going on for years with this venerable "Mother of Universities." We remember hearing Marshal BARLOW deliver a Commencement Part, (we hardly need add that he was the first scholar in a class of brilliant scholars,) the Valedictory, on "Immature Authorship and Premature Publication"—it was understood at the time that the original title was "The Folly of Commencement Parts," which was suppressed out of respect for the sensitiveness of the public. And so it has been going on ever since. "Ocean Telegraph" and "Chemistry" indeed! Eight speakers in a hundred and eight!

However, the Squantum Centre University, Colorado, is making up for this lack. Of the twenty-three graduates this year nineteen "spoke pieces," and the "Four Seasons," the "Progress of America," "Hope and Ambition Compared," and a "Retrospect of Life," received full justice at their hands. Upon the whole, therefore, we still have faith in the future of American eloquence.

The Alabama Claims—"Straws" from the Press and Public Men.

In the exhaustive condensation of the history of the Alabama negotiations which we published yesterday, one of the most noteworthy diplomatic letters was that of Mr. SEWARD, dated Jan. 18, 1866, in which, referring to the fact that Lord STANLEY seemed determined to have the proceedings of Her Majesty's Government excluded from consideration in the arbitration proposed, he declared that "a national wrong and injury to the United States" had been committed, and that

"The lowest form of satisfaction for that national injury that the United States could accept, would be found in an indemnity without reservation or compromise by the British Government to those citizens of the United States who have suffered individual injury and damages by the vessels of war unlawfully built, equipped, armed, fitted out, or entertained and permitted in the British ports and harbors."

That is to say, the late Secretary held then, as our Government holds now, that the rendering of such an indemnity was not to be left problematical, but that it should be made the essential basis of negotiations—in other words, that responsibility for the "Alabama's damages" (to put the most notorious of her class as an example for all the British cruisers,) must be accepted as the foundation for arbitration.

Now we know, in the first place, that that responsibility has never yet, in terms, been accepted by the British Government; that, on the contrary, the early negotiations opened with Lord RUSSELL's refusal were to submit that responsibility to arbitration; and that even now the British Government does not admit that the Alabama claims must be paid. Accordingly, it may seem, at first glance to be true still, as Mr. ADAMS and Lord STANLEY once declared it, that "nothing more can be expected from negotiation." But of late there is a disposition, as we have before remarked, in the British Press, and in British public men, to admit the essential point which America has all along urged; and as, after all, this would seem to be the real outlet from the labyrinth (for talk about "sacrificing British national dignity" is a bugbear, no such sacrifice being asked,) we recall and tabulate one or two of the later current indications of this sort.

The main point at issue, then, let us again premise, is the national acknowledgment, by Great Britain, of responsibility to the United States for injuries caused, as Mr. SEWARD phrases it, "by the failure of the British Government to preserve its neutrality." And, first, as to the Press. The London Times, some time ago, remarked: "As to an outright demand for payment of the claims, we should know how to treat that." This was a Delphic response, which might conveniently be recurred to, as proof that "we" would or would not pay the claims as events might decide. Other papers have been less cautious and diplomatic. The London Daily News has declared, regarding the Alabama matter: "We can only offer the material apology of paying for the injuries our recklessness in the Alabama case permitted Mr. LAIRD and Mr. SEMMES to inflict. We are ready to do this now; we shall be equally ready to do it some time hence." The London Daily Telegraph proposes to "offer restitution for any specific injury which we can be proved to have inflicted." The Birmingham Post declares: "We admit the charge of negligence in the Alabama case, and do not dispute our liability as to damages." The London Star said: "The Alabama escaped unarmed, with an ordinary merchantman's crew on board, and we are justly held to have incurred a high degree of responsibility for the consequences." Such are random citations from the English Press—that part of it, we mean, which is more favorable to the American view of the Alabama claims; and, as to the late disquisitions of Senator GRIMES and Dr. WOOLSEY, they have been received in England with a feu de joie of compliment, though they really insist, both of them, on the very national responsibility regarding which in America there is no dissenting voice.

Turning now from the Press to public men, we find Earl RUSSELL saying to Mr. JOHNSON, according to a public speech of the latter, made in Great Britain: "I know the Alabama ought never to have been suffered to go out, but Sir JOHN HARDING was partially insane, and I had to wait till he got back his senses." And, when Mr. JOHNSON answered, "why did you let her go into your ports afterward?" Earl RUSSELL replied: "The same obstacle—except that there was no insanity." Mr. PATTERSON, when the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce voted an address of welcome to Minister MOTLEY, in supporting the vote, said:

"He regretted the failure of the law officers to prevent the escape of the Alabama. The precedent was a bad one, and the maritime interests of England were sure to suffer from it. If a moderate compensation could cause the precedent, he would rejoice if it were granted by England. He was assured that the present Ministry would meet the claims of the United States without compromising the national honor."

In the striking letter of "Britannicus," a distinguished English publicist, published in the TIMES not long ago, the author said, by way of premise:

"It is now very generally admitted, however, that the Americans have a just grievance against us as regards the Alabama and other Confederate cruisers, and the majority of our people would readily consent to pay any fair compensation for actual damage done to your trade, if such damage could be assessed by fair arbitrament. We do not grudge the money; we wish to remove a grievance and restore amity."

We do not multiply citations, as space will not admit; but we may properly found a hope on such indications that there is a party in Great Britain disposed to look at the question from our stand-point as well as from their own. And, on the other hand, as we do not wish to make out a case where none there is none, as it would be folly to pretend that there is a settlement at hand when there is none sure, we may frankly admit that another section of British sentiment is decidedly opposed to the concessions of the "real grievance" and "paying for the injuries." Thus, for example, the London Times once said "to require an acknowledgment of moral liability beforehand would be to prejudge the controversy." That is true; but it is exactly what we are anxious to do. If it is "controversy" which ought to be "prejudged," we have quoted instances of its prejudgment by Englishmen, and we are by no means without hope that, with time and temper granted, the party that sees the infraction of international law as we see it, will grow to be the majority in England,—and then a few strokes of the pen will settle all. We do not ask England to reimburse us for our war expenses, nor for the half nor the tenth of them—we only call upon her to pay for the acts of her own unruly cruisers, the spawn of her own dockyards.

MINOR TOPICS.

A very curious case was before Judge CARDOZO yesterday,—a lady, through her counsel, accusing her son, who is an Episcopal clergyman, of procuring her incarceration in a lunatic asylum because she was a Ritualist. The testimony for her sanity seems as strong as the evidence of her insanity. There have come to light, within the last year or two, so many cases of the shutting up in madhouses of people of sound mind, that we feel compelled to demand a thorough investigation into the case of Mrs. ALLEN.

Fire Marshal BRACKETT complains that the Times did an act of injustice to him a day or two ago, when it took him to task for declaring a person to be guilty of arson after the District-Attorney had abandoned the prosecution, and the accused had been discharged by the Court. The Marshal explains that the report which was published, was directed to the Police Commissioners, and that it was such an one as he is required to make, by the law, which provides that in each instance he shall state "his opinion and conclusions in relation to the matter investigated." The prisoner, in this case, he alleges, was discharged, not because there was no evidence of guilt, but because of the questionable character of some of the witnesses against him, which rendered the prosecution weak. How could the question of guilt be established if the character of the witnesses precluded the taking of testimony? The act of injustice was, as we stated, committed by Mr. BRACKETT against the acquitted person. If his opinions on such points are demanded by the Police Commissioners, let him keep them from the Press and public.

It will surprise everybody to learn that General JOHN COCHRANE has declined the appointment of Collector of Internal Revenue for the Sixth District of this City. It was given out some time ago that he desired a foreign mission—say the Brazilian mission; but now that all the good diplomatic places are taken up, why did he refuse the appointment offered him?

At the base of the great twin-towered Neversink Lighthouse in the New-Jersey Highlands, in a little five-by-seven office, is to be found a mild-spoken, kindly old gentleman, nigh upon three-score and ten, who for more than thirty years has stuck to his post of Highland Light shipping reporter. He is small and spare in stature, but perfectly erect, and has white locks and a bright blue eye which (so says the boy who shines the brass of the great lantern) can tell the name of a vessel as soon as her main-truck appears above the horizon. This remarkable contradiction of the notion that Americans are a restless and changeful people is a New-Yorker, priding himself upon having been a member of the National Guard, and was a telegrapher belonging to the "New-York Company's Telegraph" at the Merchant's Exchange a dozen years before the new-fangled magnetic telegraph was thought of. He then used to swing sign-boards in the air from the top of the Exchange, after the fashion of the "wig-wag" system of signalling by flags used in the army and navy. He got himself stationed at the Highlands one Summer to recruit his health, and the Company having forgotten to recall him, he has remained there now thirty odd years. He would probably not desire a recall now, but undoubtedly chafes under the monotony of his life of confinement; for he tells his visitor that in walking the little path that leads from the station to his dwelling night and morning for thirty-two years, he has footed a distance that would have carried him twice round the world,—the world of which he has seen little more than what his glass reveals on the decks of passing vessels. Faithfully has his experienced eye watched the ships go by until he can call them all by name. The history of his quarter of a century of service would be almost a history of the commerce of this City, and would antedate the employment of steam in navigation. The ivory knob of his telegraphic instrument has been worn to the shape of his thin fingers in recording his daily chronicle. It is to be hoped that some of the blessings which sea-worn mariners invoke on the Neversink towers and the green bank on which they stand may light on the silver head of the patient, faithful reporter, who has watched for their comings and goings so many years.

We are pleased to hear that the negroes of Richmond who desired to vote the Walker ticket were permitted to do so by their colored fellow-citizens. It would be a bad sign for the Southern Freedmen if they were all to be forced to vote one way, as was the case in the late election at Washington.

There was a remarkable diminution in the number of accidents by the use of firearms on the "fifth" as compared with the records of former years. This agreeable fact is due to the strict enforcement of Superintendent KENNEDY's order against the use of guns, pistols and small arms generally. Beside preventing much human suffering and saving many lives, the order had the effect of toning down the usual deafening noise of the day. Next year let fire-crackers and torpedoes be included in a prohibitory order, and we will have an end to a stupid custom dear only to John Chinaman.

The tight-fitting tunic of the British soldier is to be superseded by something more comfortable and convenient; and an English paper thinks that, in time, the army may get rid of the abominable breeches and also of the stock. Why don't they adopt some such costume as that worn in the late war by the American volunteer, which was the lightest, most serviceable and most comfortable dress for troops ever worn?

What would be said of the management of the Hudson River Railroad Company if they were to require all passengers, who desire to ride on that line between New-York City and Poughkeepsie, to get their tickets at the office in Poughkeepsie, or pay twenty per cent. more fare? Or what would be thought of the Erie Railroad were the thousands of passengers who never ride as far as Elmira compelled to procure tickets at the Elmira office or pay twenty per cent. more than the real fare? And yet the Third-avenue and other horse railroad companies of this City make no provision for selling tickets at or near the lower end of their roads. On the Third-avenue no tickets can be procured nearer than Sixty-third-street. The ticket offices of other roads are all located two and the point first mentioned more than two-thirds of their length. Thus, because passengers do not procure tickets, everyone is compelled to pay one cent more than it would cost him were he to purchase tickets. Another most contemptible feature in the operations of these Companies is, that on the Fourth of July, when there was a tenfold demand for tickets, the clerks were absent to suit themselves! Have the people no redress for such impositions?

If it be really true that we are threatened with the destruction of all our oysters hereabouts, through assaults of the worm, it is certainly the duty of HORATIO SEYMOUR to quit his present life of dolce far niente, and, with the other indomitable Fishery Commissioner, repair at once to Long Branch, or some other choice watering place, where they can protect our favorite bivalve. Messrs. FRANCIS and BRADY, of the English Oyster Fisheries Commission, have recently found two causes of the decrease of oysters on the coast of England. A report made by Mr. FRANCIS, and lately published in the London Field, states:

"As Hayling, while we were inspecting the beds, one of the men fished up a large American Blue Point oyster, a portion of a consignment which I had the pleasure of obtaining for the Company from my acquaintance, Mr. OSELO SCOTT, of New-York, the talented writer on fishery matters, and on the shell was found a worm hard at work."

The murex bores a hole through the shell, and then eats the contents of the bivalve. The harbor crab fastens stealthily to the bivalve, and then watches its chance to thrust the hard end of its claw between the shells, when it consumes their contents. Drumfish are unable to do much harm, except to beds of very small oysters. The drumfish is leather-mouthed, and, according to ISAAK WALTON, all such fish have teeth in the throat.

The Coroner has been swift to arrest Officer CAMPBELL, who shot the man LONG during the disturbance in Washington-street, Saturday night. We hope that impartiality will mark the future proceedings in the case, and that the matter will be investigated without passion and without regard to any political exigencies. The remarks we have hitherto made upon the occurrence were predicated upon the version of the affair given by the Police, and we are not prepared to receive the totally dissimilar statement made by the friends of the rioters without question.

We learn by a letter from Baden in the Pall Mall Gazette, that Americans are not, this year, in such force there as usual; and really (says the writer) the fact does not seem to be much regretted by anybody but the shopkeepers. The Americans certainly are as a rule lavish in their purchases, but at the tables d'hôte and the promenade they are not popular, and can scarcely be profitable customers to the gambling tables. Concerning this last point, the correspondent adds:

"In spite of all one reads of the deep and desperate in America, compared with which the recklessness of the Regency would have appeared tame and cautious, I never yet saw an American playing here for high stakes. Perhaps they object to risking their money against mere foreigners, and, with true patriotism, prefer losing it at home and keeping it, if not in the family, at least in the country."

We imagine that other reasons than these may be found why Americans prefer to play for high stakes somewhere else than at Baden. For example, they have more chance of winning here than there!

We have been looking for the arrival of several ship-loads of that gold which Professor GAHN lately discovered in enormous masses in St. Domingo. The Professor need not write any more reports on the subject, nor need he come here to tempt speculators to invest in the mines, or to induce the Government to purchase the island, unless he be able to freight with gold the ship in which he is passenger.

The London journals just now are full of the Duke of NEWCASTLE's bankruptcy and the break-up and sale of his establishment in the city—all brought about by losses on the turf. This nobleman has met the fate of the Duke of HAMILTON and the Marquis of HASTINGS, and the moralists are saying wise things and expressing grave regrets. But there is little to be lamented in such matters. These peers only scattered among the people the money that, as a rule, is mismanaged in their noble hands. If they want prudence, let them suffer something, though a very small share, of the privation that visits the homes of millions of hard-working men. CAVENDISH will still have comfortable board and lodging, and perhaps "a gig," and comparative poverty may make a better man of him.

On the morning following Independence Day, the young folks think of looking into a daily paper—they want to see what fellow burst his pistol, blinded his eye or blew off his finger; and the older people are just as curious to know the results of the Fourth. Indeed the reports of this Anniversary read like the reports of a general battle—so much conflagration—so many explosions—so many killed and wounded—such scorchings and excoriations, such household frights and lamentations! Our new immigrants, the Chinese, are, as a race, inordinately fond of powder crackers and other fireworks; but we have an idea Independence Day will be too much for them.

OBITUARY.

James Roche, New-York Journalist.

Mr. JAMES ROCHE, for many years connected with the profession of journalism in Ireland and in this City, died, on Friday last, at Mount St. Vincent Hospital, of general debility. He was born in County Monaghan, Ireland, in 1815, and in early life became connected with newspapers—most of them, unhappily, of a violently partisan character. On emigrating to New-York, in 1850, he was first associated, we believe, with JOHN MITCHEL upon the Citizen; subsequently, however, he was engaged with THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER in the conduct of the Irish News up to the outbreak of the rebellion. For the benefit of his children's health he undertook a journey to Ireland in 1861; and while in his native country published a paper called the Galway American, in which he advocated the Union cause with considerable ability. His labors in this direction excited a great deal of hostility among the Secessionists, and he was involved in numberless controversies, in some cases with London journalists. Since his return to America he has written and reported for most of the City papers, and was last connected with the New-York Sun.

At a meeting of the reportorial staff of the Sun, yesterday, Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS in the chair, the following resolutions were passed:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst our honored associate, Mr. JAMES ROCHE, for many years connected with the Press of this City and of Ireland; be it therefore,

Resolved, That we, his fellow-employes of the New-York Sun, deeply regret his loss as a member of the reportorial fraternity, a congenial coworker, and an entertaining companion.

Resolved, That in the death of our associate, Mr. ROCHE, the cause of liberty in his native land has lost a warm supporter and energetic advocate. His voice and pen were ever in the command of the oppressed of all nationalities, and, though dead, he yet speaketh.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the New-York Press for publication, and be also forwarded to his family as an evidence of our enduring regard for his mem

EUROPEAN NEWS BY MAIL.

ARRIVAL OF THE SILESIA AND JAVA.

The new steamship Silesia, which left Hamburg June 23 and Havre June 26, and the Cunard steamer Java, which left Liverpool June 26 and Queenstown June 27, reached this port yesterday, with two days' later news than was at hand by the City of Paris. Captain TRAUTMANN, of the Silesia, will accept our thanks for French and German papers.

THE SILESIA.

Departure of the New Steamship Silesia on Her First Transatlantic Trip—Proportions and General Description of the Vessel—Innovations of Construction, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVRE, Saturday, June 26, 1869.

This letter will be conveyed to you by the Silesia, the new steamer which has just been completed for the Hamburg and American Company. She arrived here yesterday morning from Hamburg with a large number of passengers and a considerable quantity of freight, and received a fair addition to both during the few hours that she has been here. She leaves Havre at 10:30 o'clock this morning, so that I have only time to give you a hurried description of her.

The Silesia was built for the Company by Messrs CAIRD & Co., of Greenock, but most of her ornamental fittings were prepared in Hamburg. She is of the same class of ship as the Westphalia, which recently made such an extraordinary run from Havre to New-York—nine days and two hours—the fastest passage I believe that has been made across the Atlantic when the difference in distance between Havre and New-York and Queenstown and New-York are taken into account. The Silesia stands No. 12 on the list of the steamers which have been built and furnished with engines by the CAIRDS for this Company. Her length is 340 feet and her beam 40; the depth to maindeck is 28 feet, and her entire depth 37. She is what is usually called a spar-decked vessel, and is one of the most beautifully-modeled steamers that I have seen of her class. Her engines are described as of 600 nominal horse power, working up to 2,600, and she has four boilers and twenty-four furnaces. The engines are of the most improved and powerful construction, and the main shaft is manufactured of KRUPP's cast steel. If the anticipations, founded on the care bestowed on her construction are fulfilled, and her performance on the trip from Hamburg goes far to confirm them, she will excel in speed any of the other vessels of the line, and that with an increased economy in the consumption of fuel.

Although built to carry a large number of emigrants (600) the accommodations for the first and second class passengers are fully equal to those of the French line. The grand saloon is fitted up in the most elegant and tasteful style, the spaces between the panelings being composed of bird's eye maple and walnut, and the panelings themselves filled with oil-paintings by eminent German artists. At each side of the entrances into the sleeping berths are columns bearing bronze groups, the effect of which in a vessel of this kind is a novelty, and a most judicious one, as it helps to break the long lines of the apartment. If the ceiling, which is in white and gold, had a little more elevation, the visitor might readily imagine himself to be in an elegantly-decorated picture gallery. The number of first-class berths opening into the saloon and the adjoining corridor is seventy-four, and there is accommodation for one hundred and twenty second-class passengers. To each first-class berth there is a bell telegraph which communicates direct with the steward's pantry by the pressure of a finger—a great advantage for sea-sick passengers. All the furniture of the apartment is of the richest and handsomest description, and it contains in addition two pianos. Besides this saloon is another appropriated to ladies, which is furnished in equally handsome style. There are spacious smoking-rooms for the first and second class passengers, and the saloon occupied by the latter is just as comfortable and as well ventilated as the first. In fact, the ventilation throughout the vessel is of a superior character to that of any ship that I have been in, and is maintained by an apparatus which is driven by a small steam engine. As there are fifty ventilators distributed throughout the steamer, there is no probability of the air becoming foul or breeding sickness, even when the vessel is crowded with its full number of steerage passengers. In the space allotted to the latter, and in the elevation between the beams, (eight feet,) there are additional securities against contagion. In short, nothing has been spared to render the sanitary arrangements of the vessel the most complete and satisfactory that modern science can suggest.

The total number of hands employed on board is 143. In the engine department, there are four engineers, two assistant engineers, twenty-four firemen and sixteen trimmers. The steerage passengers receive three meals a day and are regularly supplied with fresh bread. I carefully examined this portion of the vessel and I am satisfied that a voyage can be made in as much comfort in it as in the second-class berths of some of the other lines.

Captain TRAUTMANN, the commander of the Silesia, is one of the most experienced officers engaged in Transatlantic navigation, and is exceedingly popular with all who have had the advantage to sail with him. He is a man of great energy and firmness, but at the same time kind and amiable in manner. He gave a dinner yesterday, on board, to a number of gentlemen interested in the success of the line, at which he showed that he is just as good a judge of cookery and of wines as he is of the trim of a vessel. If the fare which was provided on this occasion is an average specimen of what he means to give his passengers, all I can say is that they will have nothing to complain of. With a menu that would do no discredit to VACHETTE, and Clicquot and Chateau Lafitte to wash it down, it would be no great hardship to cross the Atlantic in such a vessel as the Silesia, and under such a commander as Captain TRAUTMANN.

At this dinner I must not omit to add that President GRANT's health was drank with all the honors. In a subsequent speech made by Mr. BROSSON, the agent of the Company, he bore testimony to the kind and disinterested support which it had always received from the American Press.

General GLASGOW, the new United States Consul at this port, has arrived, but has not as yet assumed the duties of his post. As soon as his exequatur is sent him by the French Government, he will replace General MORRIS, who is exceedingly anxious to get away. Mr. HUNT, the efficient Vice-Consul, will, I understand, remain.

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

The Death of Mr. Raymond—The Irish Church in Parliament—A Distinguished Guest—A Prosecutor Wanted—A Channel Tunnel—Ghostly Manchester.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, June 26, 1869.

Two lines by the Atlantic Telegraph a few days ago brought to all Americans in England and over Europe, a great shock; to many of us also a great sorrow. It was like a peal of thunder out of a clear sky—for never was a sad event more unexpected, an irreparable loss so utterly unlooked for. I have no heart to express anything but my deep sympathy for those who, from longer and closer intimacy with one whose death is a loss, not only to his friends but to the nation and the world, must feel a deeper grief. There may be American statesmen and publicists more widely known in England than Mr. RAYMOND, but I am sure there was no one more respected, valued and honored by those whose good opinion gives the stamp of real fame. He was recognized as a power in the State, and it will never be forgotten that he used his great power in favor of a just, wise, humane and magnanimous policy.

THE IRISH CHURCH.

After the great event of the passage of the Irish Church bill in the House of Lords, at 3 o'clock last Saturday morning, the country relapsed into more than its usual dullness. Parliament, journals and public drew a long breath, and rested upon it. The prize is past—now we wait quietly for the Lords' amendments. The Orangemen ought to collapse; but the Twelfth of July is coming, and for a fortnight before that festival they are always full of fight. They have threatened civil war, repeal, revolution, if the Church were disestablished. Lords and Commons have declared that it shall be disestablished. There is some foolish talk about implicating the Queen in exercise her prerogative and veto the bill; but the prerogatives of the Crown are exercised by Her Majesty's Ministers, and they are not going to veto their own bill. So the Orange North must submit to the national will, as the Lords have done, and the Queen will do; or fight, as they have so loudly threatened, and get beaten, as they certainly would be.

And the Orangemen have another grief. They have not only the prospect that their posterity will be obliged to pay for the pure Gospel, instead of having it furnished at the expense of Papists, but a writer in the Times has had the cruelty to quote MACAULAY's account of the battle of the Boyne, and to show that the Protestant victory they are forever boasting of having won on the banks of that bright river, was not won at all by the Protestant Irish, but by English, Scotch, French, Huguenot, Dutch, German and Scandinavian troops. The Protestant Irish formed, in fact, but a small portion of the army of victorious WILLIAM of Orange. Of these only one regiment was engaged, and that was the only one repulsed and driven back in the action. I do not see what the Orangeman can do about this on the coming anniversary, which they have determined to celebrate, in defiance of the law, in the good old fashion, unless they can disestablish MACAULAY.

But it was a grand contest in the Lords, and a great excitement at the end. The splendid chamber was crowded. On the steps of the throne were Mr. GLADSTONE, Archbishop MANNING, Royal and noble personages, foreign Ambassadors. In the ladies' gallery, not scoped up in a latticed cage as in the Commons, but in a conspicuous front row of seats running all round the house, sat the Princesses, magnificent in beauty, costume and diamonds, in all the blaze of full evening dress, cheering their favorite Bishops, and enjoying the sensation. When the House divided it was like a battle. The new Tory leader, the Marquis of SALISBURY, headed the Tory revolt, marched across the House at the head of the Tory supporters of the bill, and gave the Ministry its thirty-three majority. Lord SHAFTESBURY, two Archbishops and several Bishops refused to vote. One Bishop only voted for the bill.

The Lords have been complaining that the ladies applauded; that plaudits were heard from the strangers' gallery behind the reporters; that applause and even groans were heard from the steps of the throne. But the Marquis of SALISBURY, the most audacious Peer in the Kingdom, reminded their Lordships that they were not very orderly themselves, and he had been unable to hear the speech of a noble Lord on account of the conversation of two of Her Majesty's Ministers.

But why, it may be asked, should Peeresses have an open gallery in the House of Lords in which to display their charms and wardrobes, their smiles and diamonds, when the ladies in the Commons are shut up in a wretched little dog-hole of a close cage, and have to peep through gratings, so that only one eye and the tip of a long nose is now and then visible. How has woman's right to be seen as well as to see been achieved in the Lords, while the Commons behave like Turks? Well, the rule is that those who want freedom must fight for it. "Who would be free," &c. The ladies of England struck in the days of HORACE WALPOLE. In fact, they had got into the Lords before that, but they grew so noisy with their conversation and applause that one night they were ordered out of the chamber, and finally put out by the officers of the house. Then they made a riot, banged at the door, and screamed for admission. The Lords were stupidly inexorable. Then a new idea struck one of the ladies, and she called for silence. They were as still as mice. The weather was very warm, the knockings had ceased, not a sound was heard from the lobbies, and the Lord Chancellor, wiping his brows under his big wig on the wool sack, ordered the doors to be opened to 1st in some air. The doors swung open, and in marched the triumphant ladies; and no effort has since been made to expel them. I predict that before two years the lady commoners will have their open gallery as well as the Peeresses.

A DISTINGUISHED GUEST.

The Viceroy of Egypt has arrived in London and been quartered, not at a hotel this time, nor in a mansion volunteered by its owner to save the Government from disgrace, but in Buckingham palace, and he is to be treated to a review at Windsor, and a public breakfast in the Palace Gardens. But the Sultan is said to be jealous of his Royal progresses, and consequently he was not allowed to enter the Palace at the front door, nor sleep in the same bed as the Sultan. The Times says "there is generally in the public mind a lingering apprehension that something awkward and shabby will mark the reception of any one who comes to see us." That is so; and it is not confined to the treatment of Royal visitors. It is not that the English have not heart enough; that they are not friendly, and hospitable; but that they are inexpressibly awkward in their ways of showing it. The French are polite, the Germans simple and friendly in manner, the Spanish magnificent. The English seem cold and rude, because they are shy and ungraceful. Get over that, and you find them warm-hearted, helpful and reliable. The grasp of an Englishman's hand, when he has thawed enough to give it; the sunshine of an Englishwoman's smile, when once the ice is broken, are worth a thousand elegant bows and polite compliments. Still, these have their value, where the others are wanting; and the union of both, which I find in some traveled Americans, such as I see now at times, and some untraveled ones I remember, constitutes social perfection.

To return to the Viceroy. The Sultan does not care what bed he sleeps in, but he does care about the arrangements he may make with the Governments of the West respecting the Suez canal. The Sultan has visited Paris and London; he is increasing the number of his ironclads; he has just introduced a measure for extending education over the Empire, and in the present state of affairs he is not in the least likely to give up so important a possession as Egypt.

PROSECUTOR WANTED.

Of the want of a Government, or the proper machinery of one, in England we have many curious illustrations; but there is a remarkable one just now in the want of a public prosecutor in the OVEREND, GURNEY & Co. prosecution. The examination and indictment were secured, at a heavy expense, by a private individual. The firm were indicted and had to heavy bail. But now the case is likely to break down for want of a prosecutor. The Judge will not allow a layman to prosecute except by counsel; the Government refuses to furnish the money to pay one, and the expected contributions are not forthcoming.

A CHANNEL TUNNEL.

Mr. BRIGHT has received a deputation of the projectors and engineers of the tunnel to be dug under the Straits of Dover, so that we can go from London to Paris without changing cars or being seasick. The Emperor is ready to assist. The English Government is asked to join in a guarantee of 2½ per cent. income on the cost. There are no difficulties but financial ones. Chalk is hard enough and soft enough; and, as we know with the cables, capitalists would as soon have their money at the bottom of the sea as anywhere. They know where to find it. It will help Paris and empty London, but that does not matter.

GHOSTLY MANCHESTER.

They have had a very good ghost in Manchester lately, which filled the streets in the neighborhood of the haunted house with excited visitors, to the great profit of the publicans. All the bells in the house, fourteen in number, were kept jangling together, in the dead of night, and no watch, and no search, could detect the cause. Bell hangers were employed to rearrange the wires and muffle the bells—and for a week they were silent, and then broke out again worse than ever. I see also that Mr. HOME, whose readings at the Queen's Concert Rooms are crowded, and who seems more popular and wonderful than ever, has related his experience to the Committee of the Dialectical Society. He gave an account of his own sometimes connected with the raps of Boston, and related a fact which occurred some years ago in the presence of the Emperor MAXIMILIAN, "Werner," he said, "is a large room in the Palace, in Louis Quatorze. The Emperor and Empress were present. I was telling the story to Napoleon, and the Emperor fell it. A table was moved, then a hand was seen to come. It was a very beautifully formed hand. There were pencils on the table. It lifted, not the one next it, but one on the opposite side. We heard the sound of writing, and saw it writing on the notepaper. The hand passed before me and went to the Emperor, and he kissed the hand. It went to the Empress; she withdrew from its touch, and the hand followed her. The Emperor said: 'Do not be frightened,' and she kissed it too. It was disappearing. I said I would like to kiss it. The hand seemed to be like a person thinking, and as if it was saying, 'Why should I?' It came back to me. It had written the word 'NAPOLEON,' and it remained written now. It was as much a material hand seemingly as my hand is now. The writing was an autograph of the Emperor NAPOLEON I., who had an exceedingly beautiful hand." Mr. HOME said that the Emperor of Russia as well as the Emperor NAPOLEON had seen hands, and had taken hold of them, "when they seemed to float away into thin air."

QUEEN CASE.

I learn from LINDLEY MURRAY that two negatives are equal to an affirmative, but have been taught by many platform orators that two wrongs do not make a right. But they do in law sometimes, if not in morals. Here is an instance. JOHN MILLER, a seaman at Liverpool, was charged with bigamy, and it was proved that he had married, his former wife being still alive. He proved, however, that his first wife was his aunt—his mother's brother's widow—and that the marriage was therefore illegal. He was accordingly discharged.

THE WEATHER.

The weather has been very cold, the mean temperature for the week of the longest days in the year having been only 61° F. Feb. Snow fell in Birmingham on the 16th, and the longest day in London was a drizzling rain with cold winds. The weather has softened a little for the past two days, but is far from what you would call summery. MONADNOCK.

The English Press on the Death of Mr. Raymond.

From the Pall Mall Gazette of June 21.

The death of Mr. HENRY J. RAYMOND creates a gap among the public men of America which it will not be easy to fill. He occupied an exceptional position before his countrymen, for he had proved that he possessed great parliamentary gifts, and he had acquired a reputation as a journalist in which no other American was his equal. Garbled news, malicious attacks, willful or ignorant misrepresentations were too common even in the leading New-York papers until Mr. RAYMOND's ambition and high principle led him to adopt a nobler standard. The NEW-YORK TIMES, which he established and edited from the first, soon gained an honorable distinction for the impartiality and moderation of its comments on public affairs, and for the care with which it displayed in its columns. Mr. RAYMOND always worked hard at his paper, but that did not prevent him from undertaking the duties of several important offices. He had been Lieutenant-Governor of New-York, and for a long time was one of the leaders of the Republican Party. Just after the war he pleaded earnestly in Congress for a generous treatment of the South, and thus brought down upon his head the ire of Republicans, who were more in harmony at that time with the merciless sentiments of Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS than with those of Mr. RAYMOND and many of them promised to support him in his appeal for the crushed and ruined population of the South. But he was afterward left to fight the battle alone, and he fought it, as all admitted, with consummate ability. His speeches deeply moved all who listened to them, and the oldest members acknowledged that a more accomplished debater never sat in Congress. But he had "fallen out of line" with his party, and persons who were utterly incapable of rendering justice to the Union cause, Mr. RAYMOND had given for many years, cried out that he was turning "Copperhead." He retired, but although he held the absolute control of a very powerful organ of public opinion, he never sought to return civil for evil. It was not, indeed, in his nature to do so. He was indeed, despised when he came to him afterward for help in trouble, feeling confident that they would not be refused. Of all who knew him there is probably not one who will have a single act of unkindness to remember against him. In our world, men are not accustomed to such a character, or even cynical, but those who were familiar with him were aware that he was a man of a most gentle disposition, moved in an instant by any story of hardship or suffering; and they valued him not more for the earnestness and fidelity of his friendship than for the unblemished character which he preserved through all the temptations and vicissitudes of American political life. He will be deeply lamented in America, publicly and privately, and there are some in this country to whom the news of his untimely death will bring profound sorrow.

CORNELL UNIVERSITY.

Farewell Banquet to English Artisan Students.

On Thursday, June 24, a number of artisans about to start on the 26th for the United States, assembled at the Cannon-street Terminus Hotel at a farewell breakfast. The chair was taken by Lord HOUGHTON, and among those present were Hon. Auberon Herbert, Lord Fitzmaurice, Mr. Hodgson Pratt, Mr. Brodrick, Mr. Allen, Mr. Applegarth, Mr. George Potter, Mr. Odger, Dr. Watts, and several others who had assembled to bid God-speed to Mr. HENRY J. OPPERMAN and his little band of twenty working men, who were proceeding to the college founded by Mr. CORNELL on the principle of a division of the time between manual and mental labor, near Ithaca, in the State of New-York.

Lord HOUGHTON said that he regretted the absence of Lord STANLEY, Mr. T. HUGHES, Sir STAFFORD NORTHCOTE, and other gentlemen, who were prevented from attending. He also much regretted that Mr. ANTHONY TROLLOPE had been unable to be present, and read a letter from him sympathizing with those about to leave the country. However important were political questions, there were social questions of no less moment, and in such a question as that of emigration, the people are laying an institutional reforms, such as freedom of legislation, deliverance from ecclesiastical control, the establishment of personal liberty and the like; but all these are within the range of the statesman's duties, and do not need war for their accomplishment. The question was a question of population, not of race, has almost ceased, and with it the necessity for appealing to armed force. The "holy bayonets" have at present no mission, for on every side there are nations independent, contented, self-governed and free. Spain, Italy, and Prussia are managing their own affairs with a confidence and a success of which ten years ago few would have believed them capable. Granting that "the history of the wars of France is the history of modern civilization," it may be predicted that as the future these conditions will be changed, and that civilization will advance more by the development of each individual nation within its own limits than by any gallant and chivalrous devotion of France on the battle-field. These considerations deprive the Emperor's speech of any political effect. They are people who see a menace in everything that he utters, and it is possible that even those last statements will be declared to be big with the fate of neighboring nations. Those who are disposed to be timid in the matter may remember that there lurks in the reflection that, after all, a war must have a cause, and that each succeeding year lessens the number of the matters which Europe could fight about. In the present case the Emperor recalls the memory of a war with Austria, and bids his soldiers keep their battles in remembrance. If there were anything sinister in the allusion, it would seem to be directed against Austria. Yet nothing is more certain than that the relations between France and Austria are, and have been for a long time, cordial in the extreme. The Emperor seems to place the two Empires in healthy rumor has represented them in a strict alliance, and it is undoubted that, since the cession of Venetia at the instance of France, every trace of rivalry between the two Empires has passed away. Against whom, then, could a war be directed? Against Prussia alone, said in the speech there is not the slightest alliance to Prussia or anything which might denote that her victories and annexations were present to the Emperor's mind. In fact, there is, as far as we can see, nothing sparkling in the speech, and nothing new and remarkable, even in its overstrained military sentiment. The Emperor has, indeed, other matters to occupy his thoughts at present. On the 28th the Chambers are called together, and some indications of a domestic policy may be given to the Legislative Body. It is that Assembly there are upward of seventy independent, if not hostile, critics of the Government, and the influence which these may have cannot as yet be divined. At such a time it and hardly be supposed that the Chief of the state would go out of his way to create European uneasiness. There never was a moment at which it was more necessary that the French people, which desires above all things to be left in quiet, should have its wishes gratified. Even the excitement of the telegraph has been distasteful to the solid part of French society—that part whose acquiescence, if not its attachment, is one of the chief supports of the Empire. To impute to it a relay of excitement a speech significant of any of such a movement is to pay small homage to its judgment.

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY.

Political Conversations in the Country—Citizens' Associations—Whats "Honest Countrymen" Think of the Plan.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

PANAMA, Chautauqua County, N. Y., Tuesday, July 6, 1869.

The "honest" men of this county are in a great deal of trouble to know what to do in regard to the nomination of candidates for Senator and members of Assembly for this district. They have always looked upon the Tribune as their political text book. They have taken it and read it, and have heretofore followed its advice. They have attempted to do so in this county but they find themselves puzzled in carrying out the philosophical political suggestions. They do not for a moment suppose that this arises from want of wisdom in the suggestions themselves, but they are painfully sensible that the difficulty lies with them (countrymen as they are) in making practical application of them. This is their meaning: On the 20th ult. that journal advised them to establish "Citizens' Associations," having for their object the defeat of "hackers" of whatsoever party, who might obtain a nomination for either branch of the Legislature. In this district we have had considerable trouble to get the "Citizens' Association" started. At first a few of us who know, each for himself, that he is honest, got together to inaugurate the society. One gentleman suggested that Governor FENTON should be called in, but another said, "That won't do; I have read something in the New-York Commercial Advertiser, and also in the Evening Post, that reflects upon his character, and he will not answer the Tribune's description of the sort of person that should go into these citizens' associations; for the Tribune says they should be men above suspicion." Well, we passed by Senator FENTON; and another suggested MAT. BURNS, at present a member of Assembly from this District; but he was tabooed by Jones, the blacksmith, who drew from his pocket a copy of the Tribune, in which his name is in the "black list" of those who voted for the New-York Tax Levy. So we had to give FENTON and BURNS both the go-by and organize our "association" without either of them, but composed of men who are all honest, according to the Tribune's mode of ascertaining the fact. It is true that some of our neighbors do not speak as well of the "honesty" of some of our members as we could wish, but then we are sure they are influenced by envy or malice. We have no doubt of the "honesty" of all our members, for each one vouches for himself. And who can know better in regard to that matter than he does?

Well, as I said before, we completed our "Citizens' Association," were getting ready for active operations when along came another piece of advice in the Tribune of July 5, as follows:

"We entreat the Republicans of each Senate and Assembly District to deal about them now for fit men to be nominated for our next Legislature. Let expert knowledge, if possible, but honest, incorruptible men at all events. * * * * * * * *

Let every of the leading men in a district quietly meet, each calling in his neighbors, and let them consult and deliberate, and look the district over to see who is the fittest man for the place in view. Having decided, let them draw up a public requisition to this effect:

"We, Republicans of the Assembly District of ——County, respectfully recommend to our fellow-citizens the support of —— for [Senate or Assembly, as the case may be.]

Make several copies of this requisition, let each be signed by all present, and then intrusted to an active, influential man in a particular township or ward to be by him circulated among his neighbors. One week's faithful effort will render the nomination of any one else, no matter how 'regular,' of no consequence."

Now, here is an appeal, not to the "honest" men, but to the "leading men" of the district, to "quietly meet" "to see who is the fittest man for the place in view," and, "having decided," to put him on the track.

FENTON and BURNS are both "leading men" in this neighborhood. There is no disputing that. What is there to hinder one or both of them getting forty-nine other "leading men" to "quietly meet" and decide upon "the fittest man for the place?" Having done so, could they not "draw up a public requisition to this effect," "make several copies," &c., as well as any other fifty leading men?

And then, when you come to think of it, why may they not start "Citizens' Associations" as well? They can assume that they are "honest," the same as those of us do who simply know that we are "honest."

I tell you, Mr. Editor, these things bother us "ignorant countrymen," whom the Tribune so constantly favors with advice, a good deal. We don't know exactly what to do with them. Sometimes they look to us like elephants; but we know they are not, for we have great confidence in Mr. GREELEY, and do not believe he would impose upon us.

We had got to thinking pretty well of the good old way which we have in the country of calling public meetings, and inviting all Republicans to come out and select good men as delegates to attend the Senatorial and Assembly District Conventions, there to "decide upon the fittest man" and nominate him. But I suppose this will not do any longer, for I infer from what Mr. GREELEY says that it results sometimes in sending "jobbers" to the Legislature.

Perhaps we ought to try the sort of organization—"machine," I see the Elmira Advertiser calls it—that you have in New-York. That does not send many Republican jobbers to the Senate, and not many anywhere else.

Will not some of your City editors, who know so much, and who are so fond of giving us countrymen "good advice," tell us what we shall do? Do you think Mr. GREELEY would have us try both these plans simultaneously? If so, would it not be well for us to try at the same time the sort of "machine" which you have in New-York? We countrymen don't exactly understand what the Tribune wants to accomplish. From the way it pitches into Republicans we suspect that it thinks Democrats as a rule, are more "honest" than their opponents, and that it desires the election of Democrats. If that is so, its plans are both calculated to accomplish that result. It is important that we should be "advised" with as little delay as possible, for there is danger that the people may get the upper hand of both the "leading men," and the "honest" ones. I am yours, C. GREEN.

Democracy in Ohio—George E. Pugh Suggested as a Candidate for Governor.

From the Cincinnati Commercial.

TUESDAY, June 29, 1869.

Mr. EDITOR: Permit me to suggest that in a time of so much doubt and misgiving, the Democracy of Ohio need a leader whom they have tried and ever found faithful. As one of them, I suggest for Gubernatorial candidate Hon. WILLIAM ALLEN, of Ross County. He has long sought the office of course. It will even be difficult to persuade him into the acceptance of a unanimous and enthusiastic nomination. But I think a committee of his personal friends would induce him to make the canvass for us. And what a canvass it would be! From every corner of the State would come the comrades of the old Jackson Guard. Democrats—like me, in feeble health, and fainting in heart almost to despair—would feel like taking off their coats and making one more effort "A Vesperance," for the liberty of the country and the happiness of the people.

Taxes! taxes!! taxes!!! No end of them; no mitigation; no standing even where we stood at the time of the last visit of the tax-gatherer. On such a footing, as upon the impracticable New-England tariff by which our industry is poured into the dust, such a voice as that of WILLIAM ALLEN would shake Ohio from her centre to her circumference.

But I need not enlarge my communication. I add only that the Democracy, in my opinion, gains no end a little good advice, although I may not be the safest counselor. I feel it my duty to them, who have so much honored me, to publish this article in recitation of what I think best. And I very much approve that French law requiring a man who writes an article for publication to sign it with his name. I do so, with confidence, and will esteem myself the more if you thus print it. G. E. PUGH.

A Railroad Train Runs Into a Powder Wagon.

From the Troy Times, July 6.

There was a singular accident, and a marvelously fortunate one, on the Troy and Boston Railroad, last evening. The 10 o'clock express train North ran into a powder wagon crossing the track a short distance above Valley Falls, smashing the wagon into pieces and sending the powder flying in all directions. One keg of it was hurled a distance of at least fifty feet in the air, and came down again upon the track and was run over by the cars. Strange to say it was not exploded by the rough usage it received, and the train passed on safelyenough. Think of it! Imagine the rushing fire and smoke, smashing into a powder wagon, knocking the keg about and then flying over there without causing an explosion. Such an accident does not occur again in the next million years. Nobody was hurt, nothing else was injured, and the train went on without delay or even stopping.

THE SHUGART MURDER TRIAL.

Conviction of Mrs. Philomena Shugart at Butler, Penn., of the Murder of her Husband by Poison.

PITTSBURG, Tuesday, July 6.

MRS. PHILOMENA SHUGART, who has been on trial in Butler County for the murder of her husband by poison, was convicted of murder in the first degree on Monday.

The Last Days of the Trial—The Family of the Murdered Man in Court.

The theory of the defence in the murder trial at Butler, Penn., the result of which is given above, was that JACOB SHUGART committed suicide. They admitted that he died by poison, but contended that it was administered, not by his wife, but by himself. The Pittsburg Commercial, in its report of the trial, gives the following account of the scene in the Court-room on Saturday, when the arguments of the counsel for the State and for the accused were heard:

It was a scene that one rarely sees in a Court of Justice, and no pen could properly describe the beauty of the prisoned man, as he gazed around the counsel table to hear the fate of his mother and the wife argued and decided. There, just within the bar of the Court, is the counsel table occupied by the counsel for the defence. The three attorneys occupy one semi-circle. On the right of the other semi-circle is seated the eldest of the unmarried daughters, AMELIA, holding in her lap the laughing, merry little girl LOUISA, only 6 years of age; in childish glee she looks up at the sad face of her older sister, unmindful of the dark cloud that has gathered and is settling gloomily over their family circle. Her childish prattle sounds strangely when contrasted with the hoarse whispers of the crowd of spectators, and her smiling face looks vastly different from their earnest and expectant countenances. Next to her sits ANNIE, the little girl 17 years of age, who carried to the field the last meal her father ever ate, and sat down and endeavored to husk corn with her little hands, while by her side her father swallowed the poison that was soon to hurry him to the grave. She sits there calm and motionless, looking at the jury, the Court and the attorneys as if scarce comprehending the scene around her. There is a look of wonder in her countenance, as if she were saying to herself, "Can mother be guilty of this awful crime?"

Next to her sits, scarce half occupying a huge attorney's chair, the little child LEEMA, 6 years of age. Her little curly head peers timidly over the table, and she evidently cannot comprehend the importance of the case so soon to be decided yet she wonders why she is placed there, and why the spectators stare at her so rudely. Next to her sits MAGGIE, a fine looking young lady 15 years of age, and she too appears to be wondering "whether mother is guilty."

Just beyond her stands a vacant chair in the semi-circle. A tottering form in black enters the court-room, and accompanied by the Sheriff, walks feebly to the vacant chair, and with a hacking cough, sinks, half-fainting, into it. The face of little LOUISA brightens. She looks earnestly at the emaciated countenance and attenuated form. If has been many months since she has seen them, and sickness, trouble, and perhaps crime, have blanched the cheek that was then glowing in health, and paled the form that was then so vigorous. The child looks a moment, and then the single but marvelously impressive word "mamma" escapes her lips, and gliding from the lap of her sister, she passes around the counsel table and climbs upon the knee of her mother.

That woman, charged with criminal intimacy with JAMES MARTIN, charged with criminal intimacy with her brother-in-law, charged with the murder of her husband, caught the little child in her arms and kissed her. The tiny arms were twined around the neck of the feeble mother, and a loving kiss given. For the first time since the trial commenced, the overspread the ghastly pale woman, and the picture was completed. In the back ground stood the court-room of spectators, and on their serious countenances was an expression which might possibly be termed "wonder"—wonder as to whether the prisoner was innocent or guilty of the crime. What attorney could not plead eloquently, what juror's heart would not be touched, what Judge would not feel the common impulse of humanity at viewing such a scene as this?

PERSONAL.

Among the passengers by the Russia today is Mr. D. D. HOWARD, of this City, who, it will be remembered, was one of the persons who were poisoned at the National Hotel, Washington, in 1867. Mr. HOWARD has been an invalid ever since, and is supposed to be the only survivor of that ill-fated company. He hopes to derive benefit from his present voyage.

A fine copy of TITIAN's celebrated picture, "The Bella Donna," is at present on exhibition at SCHAUS's gallery. It is to be sold for the benefit of the "Ladies' Baptist Home Mission Society."

College Boat Race—Contest Between Students of St. Stephen's College, Annandale.

There was an interesting aquatic contest near Barrytown, N. Y., on the 5th, by members of the Burd Boat Club, of St. Stephen's College, Annandale. The boats which raced were the Rosalie and the Miramonde, each 30 feet long, 4 feet wide and 19 inches deep.

The crew of the Rosalie consisted of A. J. Gibson, (bow,) T. B. Fulcher, G. C. Athole, H. B. Ellwanger, R. S. Weylie, Lieutenant G. H. Sterling, (stroke,) O. C. Edgerton, coxswain. The Miramonde's crew consisted of J. McElroy, (bow,) R. M. Hayden, P. H. McMahon, S. A. Kellogg, J. R. Chase, W. R. Thomas, (stroke,) J. C. Moody, coxswain.

The distance to be rowed was one mile and a half, turning a stake-boat at half the distance.

The Rosalie shot ahead of her rival, and keeping the lead passed the judges' stand some distance ahead, winning the race in ten minutes fifty seconds; the Miramonde making the distance in eleven minutes, forty seconds.

As the winning crew came alongside the dock, they were showered with bouquets by the ladies present, as were also the crew of the Miramonde, who, although vanquished on this occasion, will have another chance for their reputation as oarsmen.

Woman's Suffrage Association.

The weekly meeting of the Woman's Suffrage Association at the "Bureau," yesterday afternoon, was attended by the usual number of ladies. Several new members joined the Association. For the information of all interested, the admittance fee is one dollar, and the privileges enjoyed are the right to speak at the meetings and to vote on all questions. The Association meets every Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at No. 49 East Twenty-third-street, where strangers, men and women alike, are cordially invited to attend. Yesterday Mrs. STANTON presided. The principal subject considered was whether woman's property should be taxed when she has no voice in the Government. Mrs. Dr. JONES read a report stating that a large proportion of the property taxed in this City belongs to women, as the records will show. The proposition to refuse to pay taxes was not acted on, the lawyers having advised that such a course at present would end in the discomfiture of the women. Addresses on the suffrage question and woman's rights in general were made by Mrs. STANTON, Mrs. PHELPS, Mrs. BLAKE, Mrs. NORTON, Mrs. Dr. JONES, Mrs. BROSSON, Professor WILCOX and others.

Accident in Jamaica, L. I.

Yesterday morning two men, named JAMES PERRY and JOSEPH BLAIR, while working on the new Town Hall in course of erection at Jamaica were violently thrown to the ground by the scaffold on which they were standing suddenly giving way. Dr. HENDRICKSON was immediately called to their aid, and it was found that the injuries of PERRY will in all probability prove fatal. The other man was only slightly hurt.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

For to-morrow two large sales are announced, one of quite valuable property situated at Rye, Westchester County, and the other of lots not so high-priced, located at Maspeth, L. I. Thus two classes of persons can be accommodated on the same day; men of means who desire to purchase in an aristocratic neighborhood, where, surrounded by wealth and handsome villas, they may erect elegant dwellings, and find about them others of equal value and beauty; and men in moderate circumstances, who desire pleasant homes in desirable and convenient neighborhoods, where they may live comfortably and economically, and find society suited to their tastes and purses.

The Rye property is beautifully located in a decidedly healthy neighborhood, of easy access and within a short distance of New-York. It is divided into two estates, known respectively as "Glen Dale" and "West Rye." The first consists of seventy-six acres, sub-divided into twenty lots, running from two to fifteen acres each. The second comprises about fifty lots, immediately adjacent to the village of Rye. The plots, it will be noticed, are much larger than ordinarily sold at auction, but it must also be remembered that the property is more desirable than is usually disposed of under the hammer. The purchaser here is not confined to a little square, large enough for his house and a small garden only, but has room for barns, stables and other outhouses, and ground enough in addition to that laid out in flower garden and lawn, to raise all the vegetables his family may need. A full description of the property may be had on application to A. WILSON, Jr., at Rye, or No. 9 Broad-street, New-York; Dr. SILLEBER, No. 39 Ann-street; BERRE & GODWIN, Tribune Building; MULLER, WILKINS & CO., Auctioneers of "Glen Dale," No. 1 Pine-street, or S. DINGEE, auctioneer of West Rye, No. 9 Pine-street, New-York. A special train will leave the depot of New-York and New-Haven Railroad, corner Fourth-avenue and Twenty-seventh-street, at 10 o'clock A. M. on the day of the sale. A collation will be furnished on the premises, upon the arrival of the train.

The Maspeth property has already been described in this column. To persons of moderate means, who desire respectable but not extravagant homes, who cannot afford all the luxuries, yet are able to surround themselves with the comforts of life, this property commends itself. The location is good, the neighborhood excellent, pretty ornamental cottages are being erected on every side, and many public improvements are being made. The Grand-street extension, when completed, will add greatly to its value, and when that and the new railroad are finished, probably very little property will be offered for sale, and what is, will command high prices. The large factories in the neighborhood are making hundreds of new residents, and the town is growing steadily. This sale will give it a new impetus. Lunch served by first-class caterers on arrival of train. Special trains leave James-slip at 1 o'clock P. M., Thirty-fourth-street at 1:15 P. M., and Hunter's Point, via Flushing Railroad, at 1:30 P. M. Maps, particulars and free tickets may be had at the office of MALLORY & BLACKWELL, auctioneers, No. 55 Liberty-street, New-York.

THE CUBAN RINGLEADERS.

Colonels Byron and Ryan Concealed at the Whitney House.

Trial of General Golcuria—The Populace Anxious to get hold of the Government Witnesses, French and David—A Disgusted Recruit Pronounces the Expedition a Fraud and a Farce.

The Cuban movement still forms one of the current topics of interest in this City, despite the probably fatal reverses which have fallen on the revolutionary cause. Fresh and important particulars concerning the recently captured expedition and its leaders develop themselves daily, both in private and official circles, and become the absorbing subject of discussion for the time being.

COLONELS RYAN AND BYRON IN THE CITY.

Among the information which is likely to cause the greatest consternation is the announcement that Colonel RYAN and Colonel BYRON have been secreted in this City for several days past, the latter since his escape from the Navy-yard, and the former subsequently to his flight from the revenue cutters on Long Island. There is good reason for supposing that Colonel BYRON has been boarding at the Whitney House, corner of Broadway and Twelfth-street, and that he has escaped detection by the Marshal's officers by the vigilance and caution which his friends have exercised. It is also known that he is almost daily visited at his rooms by some of his most intimate fellow-adventurers, including Colonel RYAN, who has called on him in a disguise, which is said to be very complete. Among other things he has sacrificed his long black hair, so as to avoid being identified. Colonel BYRON is also in communication with prominent members of the Cuban Junta, who have lately held frequent interviews with him at his hotel.

THE PROSECUTION OF GENERAL GOICURIA.

Considerable excitement centres around the case of General DOMINGO GOICURIA, whose examination was commenced before Commissioner BUTTS yesterday afternoon. He is accused of violating the sixth section of the Neutrality laws of 1839, in having fitted out a hostile expedition in this City for the invasion of a country at peace with this country. His examination was conducted by Assistant-District-Attorney BELL for the Government, and by Mr. LOUGHREY for the defence. A large number of spectators were assembled in the Court-room, mostly composed of friends of, and sympathizers with the accused. The testimony which was elicited from the witnesses was exceedingly interesting.

The first person called was Albert H. Winslow, who said that he was a United States Deputy Marshal, in which capacity he arrested General Goicuria on board the steamer Catherine Whiting, on Monday, the 28th of June; she was lying in the Bay, about a mile below Governor's Island, at the time; witness visited her with some other persons on board the tugboat Easton; General Barlow was present when the arrest was made; the warrant was issued by the latter officer.

TESTIMONY OF THE "INFORMER."

Henry W. French, the "informer," was next examined. On appearing on the stand he was received with hisses from the spectators, but the noise was summarily suppressed by the Court at the request of Marshal Barlow. The objection-able witness testified that he recently resided at Bridgeport, Conn.; he knew General Goicuria; saw him on several occasions during the last six or eight weeks; first saw him at No. 71 Broadway, at the office of the Cuban "Joint" (Junta) Committee; became acquainted with his name through a certain gentleman inquiring for him; was placed there by Colonel Ryan. At this point the question was asked as to the object of his visits, which was objected to and ruled out by the Court.

The witness then continued as follows: Saw Colonel Ryan the first week there, in the private room of the Committee; went in there to tell him that parties outside wished to see him; saw him there every day; he usually occupied the exterior room; persons coming there inquired for General Goicuria; did not see him for some time after Colonel Ryan's arrival; subsequently saw him on board the steamer Catherine Whiting; I was in the habit of receiving orders from him; he told me on one occasion to go to Spencer & Co., in Beekman-street, hardware merchants, then to hold certain goods until such time as he should want them; I made purchases for Ryan; bought emery paper, gun oil, gun wrenches, saws, files, &c.; know Colonel Byron; saw him at No. 71 Broadway; never saw him in conversation with Goicuria; I was instructed with the purchasing of goods by Colonel Ryan; Goicuria never asked me anything about the purchases.

On cross-examination French deposed: Am a mechanic; have worked at various places; became acquainted with Colonel Ryan in June last; he also employed me to enlist; I was first induced to give information about Ryan and his friends on Thursday afternoon in Jersey City; Wheeler spoke to me about it; he took me on one side and told me that I was a young man and ought to know better than to get into a business like this; he told me to have a drop; Wheeler never offered me anything for my information; I went with him to Mr. Craig's office; Mr. Craig is a lawyer; I told him that I would state what I knew about the expedition; I made up my mind to take Wheeler's advice; I did not go to remain in the service of Colonel Ryan for the purpose of finding out what he did and then exposing him; he never gave me any money to buy anything; he never paid me for my trouble while I was with him; when I saw that the thing must fall through and that everybody had been up, I made up my mind to get out the best way I could; I wasn't paid a cent; I wasn't paid anything for my testimony; I am supported now by Mr. Bangs; he gives me money enough to get my victuals with; Wheeler is in Mr. Bangs' employ; Mr. Bangs had nothing to do with persuading me to do right.

On the redirect, French deposed: I enlisted at No. 629 Broadway, under Captain Peters; Colonel Ryan sent me down to No. 71 Broadway; I was ordered to go to Jersey City; we crossed over the ferry in the forenoon; we came over night and returned the next day to the Casino, in Houston-street; the terms of my enlistment were that I should receive $20 a month in gold, payable in advance, and that I should get $1,000 in gold at the end of the revolution.

TESTIMONY OF THE ALLEGED "SPANISH SPY."

Henry W. Davies, the reputed "Spanish spy," was the third witness called. He testified as follows: I came from General Goicuria on board the Whiting on the day previous to his arrest; I had no conversation with him; he was not then known as General Goicuria; he was introduced to me by Captain Greenwood as the purser of the steamer; he said that he was going to Galveston; the vessel's cargo consisted of bales of hay, barrels of mess pork, barrels of hard bread, coffee, whisky, sugar, hammocks and several other articles, among which was a pontoon bridge; the Whiting was lying at anchor about a mile from the Battery; the first time I saw her she had lights; I watched her till 3:30 o'clock on Sunday morning; the night was very dark; I saw a tug come alongside her, after which the lights on both vessels were extinguished; I noticed several tugs standing down the Bay in the direction of the Narrows; one of them carried about fifty men; I boarded the Whiting about eleven o'clock on Sunday morning; I found Gen. Goicuria, Captain Greenwood and about thirty men belonging to the crew on board; she had no passengers; when Goicuria came down aft he brought a black satchel along which he said was his, and which he opened at General Barlow's solicitation; I subsequently found a trunk on the tugboat H. M. Cool, at the Navy-yard, which I believed to be the property of Goicuria; I found in it a map and a copy of Upton's Tactics, which were marked with his name; I also discovered several papers in the trunk. (Several papers were shown witness, which he said he recognized as the ones spoken of.) His evidence was here broken off, owing to the late hour.

Mr. LOUGHREY subsequently asked the Court to receive the personal recognizance of his client, but Mr. BELL opposed the motion, saying that General GOICURIA had been given ample time to procure bail, which he apparently had not done in office. The case was finally adjourned until this morning at 10 o'clock. The spectators met in the corridor outside of the Court-room after the trial was over, waiting for the appearance of FRENCH, whom they were evidently desirous of chastising or injuring. They were disappointed in their design, however, as the witness made his way out of the building from a back entrance.

BELLIGERENT ADDRESS BY GENERAL GOICURIA.

On Monday afternoon General GOICURIA was visited at Ludlow-street Jail by a procession of Cubans, who gave him a flattering ovation. He was allowed to stand on the outside of the jail, where he made the following address to his countrymen:

CUBANS AND FRIENDS: Welcome to all. If Spanish gold has corrupted American officials this time to stay us in our mission, you must be sure that in this country of liberty we have many friends that will yet help us in our struggles. Have faith in our cause and we shall yet conquer in spite of the world. I promise you that very soon I will accompany you to carry our flag to victory, with its motto to live or die in Cuba. Adios.

RELEASE OF BARRONA AND ALFARO.

Before ALFARO and BARRONA, the two prominent members of the Cuban Junta Committee, who were lately captured on tug boats, were yesterday brought before a United States Commissioner, when they gave bail in $5,000 each for their future appearance.

The Cuban Expedition a Fraud on the Cuban Junta.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is now nearly a month since I saw an advertisement in the New-York Herald to the effect that all those who had been soldiers could hear of something to their advantage by calling at No. 626 Broadway. I accordingly visited the so-called "headquarters for the enlistment of filibusters for Cuba," and was there introduced to a man styling himself Captain JAMES PETERS, who took my name and formally enlisted me as a high private in Colonel RYAN's command to go to Cuba.

I there worked with the whole body faithfully, doing all duties imposed upon me, even to assisting materially in the rescue and release of Colonel RYAN from the hands of the Deputy Marshal. It has been said that RYAN gave the man who imprisoned DOWNEY in the Casino, a $50 note. This is a lie, as none of those who participated in it ever got one cent (excepting 50 cents) as that or any subsequent time from RYAN. I now then I wish to denounce this whole Cuban expedition as not only a fleece but a farce, a piece of trick to extort or make money from the wealthy Cubans and others who sympathize with the revolutionary cause. They have not wished to go to Cuba, (that is, some of them have not,) but if they (the officers so-called,) allowed such information to be given as caused in their capture and imprisonment in Ludlow-street Jail. Respectfully yours, &c., GEORGE ALLIGOT,

THE POWELL EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

Rideon's Story Probably a Hoax—Letters Received from Major Powell Since the Date of the Pretended Disaster—Statement of Mrs. Powell.

From the Detroit Tribune, July 6.

A few days since the telegraph reported a startling rumor, from some yet in the far West, that Major POWELL and the whole of his party, engaged in an exploring or scientific expedition upon the Colorado River, had all been lost with the exception of a single individual. On Friday night the telegraph further added what purports to be the particulars of the loss, said to have been narrated by one JOHN A. RIDDOX, the sole survivor of the expedition, at Springfield, Ill., to Governor PALMER, and so minute is he in the details of this statement, as to leave no room for a general belief in their truthfulness.

In the telegraphic reports as published in the Chicago papers of Saturday morning, purporting to give the statement as rendered to Governor PALMER, there are evidences of untrustworthiness which may be detected, and which become more glaring when real facts become known, so that we are justified in saying that the report of this man RIDDOX, beyond all reasonable doubt, is a tissue of fabrications from beginning to end.

Mrs. POWELL, the wife of Major POWELL, the head of the expedition, is now in this city spending the season of her husband's absence with her father, Mr. DRAE, of the firm of BUHL & CO., and from her we gather facts that utterly falsify this story. The leading features of RIDDOX's statement are as follows: That he joined Major POWELL's party July 10, 1868, at La Salle, Ill.; that on the 7th or 8th of May of this Spring the party, consisting of about twelve individuals, reached the Colorado River; that on the 16th or 18th of May the whole party, with the exception of RIDDOX, in attempting to cross the Colorado River in a large bark canoe, near some rapids, were lost; that he remained some days in the vicinity endeavoring to find the remains of some of the party but failed to do so; that then taking the two boats belonging to the party" he started for civilization and reached a post on Red River about June 1.

Now the facts which prove the utter unreliability of this story, as obtained from Mrs. POWELL, are as follows: This is the third season that Major POWELL has been engaged in these explorations, and Mrs. POWELL has before accompanied her husband in all his travels, passing the last Winter in the mountains with him and his party. She knows by name every member of the party. His present expedition is composed of the same individuals that were with him last Summer and Winter. Among them there was no such man as JOHN A. RIDDOX, or any person bearing the names given in the Chicago papers of Saturday as composing the party and as lost. Major POWELL's first expedition was in 1867, and consequently he could not have enlisted any man in it as long ago as July, 1868, when RIDDOX says he joined it. Again, RIDDOX says they were all drowned on the 16th or 18th of May, in the Colorado River. Mrs. POWELL has a letter from her husband, dated Green River Station, on the Pacific Railroad, May 25, saying that he expected to start about the 28th, and the Chicago Tribune, of May 30, published a letter from him, dated May 24, two days later, from the same Station, giving an account of what the party proposed to do, some eight days after RIDDOX drowns them hundreds of miles away on the Colorado. Again, there was not an animal connected with the expedition, the party relying wholly upon the boats for transportation, as the expedition was to be confined wholly to regions accessible by streams; hence there were no "two teams" for Mr. RIDDOX to bring away. Further, the party only consisted of twelve or fifteen men, and it would be difficult in that number to find twenty-five to put into a "bark canoe" to cross a river and be swallowed up.

The foregoing facts are alone sufficient to prove RIDDOX's story an entire fabrication, and to have been gotten up for a sensation, but there are several others that might be named, showing its extreme improbability. Major POWELL is a man of much experience in exploring expeditions, this being his third season, and his party is chiefly composed of men who have been with him in most of his former travels, and, with a few exceptions, are men of culture and fine scholarship. Major POWELL is a man of extreme care in all his movements, and there is nothing of the foolhardiness about him or his men that would prompt them to trust the whole party at one time in a "bark canoe" to cross dangerous rapids. It is only a few weeks since he was in Chicago, and there had his boats made expressly for his expedition, each of them having air-tight compartments of six feet in length at each end, as a preventative against any foundering in case they should accidentally be thrown into any rapids. It is not, therefore, likely that he would have occasion to trust his whole party in a single "bark canoe." Major POWELL did not expect to make the Colorado until September. They were to embark at Green River Station, on the Pacific Railroad, and spend June, July and August in explorations upon Green River, which is a branch of the Colorado. From these facts, and others that might be given, we think the friends of those connected with the expedition need feel no uneasiness as to their safety. Neither need there be uneasiness for want of later news from the party themselves, as they took ten months' provisions, thinking it might be that time before they again emerged into the limits of civilization, although Major POWELL thought they might come out late in the Fall. Mrs. POWELL says she shall feel no fear if she has no further word from her husband for ten months. The telegraph tells us that Major POWELL's mother, who lives in Wheaton, Ill., has a letter from him dated May 28, and does not credit the story at all.

A Card from Mrs. Powell—She Looks Upon the Story as a Fabrication.

DETROIT, Saturday, July 3, 1869.

To the Editor of the Detroit Post:

As the reports in circulation concerning the disaster to the "Powell Exploring Expedition" are calculated to give uneasiness to many friends, I think it is well, perhaps, for me to state that I look upon the whole story as a fabrication. I have accompanied my husband, Professor J. W. POWELL, commander of the expedition, for the past two years, and have but recently left the party. No person bearing the name of JOHN A. RIDDOX has ever been connected with it. The named he gives of the members of the party are correct, without a single exception, false.

His statement that he saw the whole party destroyed on the 8th of May, must be untrue, as I have letters up the 22d of May, and the Chicago Tribune published a letter dated 24th of May.

To one at all acquainted with the plans, aims and minutiæ of the expedition, the whole story is glaringly false, and betrays entire ignorance of the matter. It is not the intention of the expedition to reach the "Great Canyon," or to attempt its exploration until some time in September.

The months of June, July and August are to be spent in doing preliminary work. In addition to the work of making collections in Geology and Natural History, their object is to determine the latitude, longitude and altitude of various points of interest on the route, and to make observations on the climate. It is obvious that to accomplish this work, their progress must be quite slow. It will be remembered that in a former communication he (Mr. JOHN A. RIDDOX) made the astounding statement that the whole party were lost when 800 miles from civilization. It will be readily seen, from the few facts I have given, how little reliance can be placed on any statement he may make.

I may add that the party were without horses or mules. The idea of taking a peak-train had been abandoned, and they were to rely solely upon the boats. MRS. J. W. POWELL.

THE GRAND CANYON OF THE COLORADO.

Remarkable Voyage by an Exploring Expedition in 1867—An Interesting Narrative.

From the Chicago Times, July 5.

The reported loss of the Powell exploring expedition, on the Colorado River, will revive public interest in the subjoined account of the remarkable voyage through the "great canyon" of that stream in 1867, by a citizen of Kenosha, Wis. It will be seen from this account that the Powell expedition, at the time of the alleged disaster, could not have been on the Colorado River:

To General Wm. J. Palmer, Director of Surveys, Kansas Pacific Railway:

SIR: The railroad survey now in progress under your direction has afforded many opportunities for acquiring valuable additions to our geographical knowledge of the unexplored regions of the far West, from original sources not accessible to ordinary map compilers.

Mining prospectors within the last twenty years, more adventurous even than the noted trappers of the Rocky Mountains, have hardly left a mountain stone unvisited or a water course unexamined over the wide extent of country from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean. Could the varied and adventurous experiences of these mountain men be brought into an accessible form, we should know nearly as much of the western wilds as we now do of the old settled portions of the country.

Among the geographical problems remaining for the longest time unsolved was the actual character of the stupendous chasm or canyons through which the Colorado of the West cleaves its way from its snowy sources to its exit into the California Gulf. Within the last ten years public attention has been frequently directed to this subject, and various Government expeditions have imparted reliable information in reference to the upper and lower course of this remarkable river. Lieutenant IVES, in 1857-58, made a satisfactory exploration of the navigable portion of the Colorado, extending from its mouth to the Big Canyon, and since then a regular line of Ocean steamers has been successfully traversing these inland waters. Still, the great canyon remained a myth; its actual length, the character of the stream, the nature of its banks, and the depth of its vertical walls, were subjects for speculation, and afforded a fine field for exaggerated descriptions, in which natural bridges, boiling whirlpools, and fearful cataracts naturally formed a prominent feature. Now, at last, we have a perfectly authentic account of the character of this great canyon of the Colorado, derived from the lips of a man who actually traversed its terrible depths. Not for needless fear of science, still lives to detail his trustworthy observations of this most remarkable voyage. Happening to fall in with this man during my recent stay of a few days at Hardyville, on the Colorado, I drew from him the following connected statement, in answer to direct questions carefully written at the time:

NARRATIVE.

PETER WHITE, now living at Callville, on the Colorado, formerly from Kenosha, Wis., was induced to join a small prospecting party in search of gold washings in the San Juan region, west of the Rocky Mountains. The original party was composed of four men, under command of a Captain BAKER. This party left Fort Dodge on the 13th of last April, and, after crossing the Plains, completed their outfit for San Juan country in Colorado City, leaving that place on the 20th of May. Proceeding by the way of South Park and the Upper Arkansas, they crossed the Rocky Mountains passing round the headwaters of the Rio Grande, till they reached the Animas branch of the San Juan River. Here their prospecting for gold commenced, and being only partially successful, they continued still further to the west, reaching the Dolores and Mancos branches. The last stream was followed down to the main valley of the San Juan, when they crossed over to the left bank, and followed down the valley 200 miles. At this point the San Juan River enters a canyon, to avoid which they again crossed to the right bank, and struck across a mesa or table-land for a distance of 60 miles, over a very rugged country, they reached this latter stream, or rather its main eastern branch, Grand River, being still above the junction of Green River—the united waters of which two streams go to form the Colorado proper. At the point where they first struck the latter, its steep, rocky banks were inaccessible, and they accordingly followed up the stream in search of a place where water could be procured. At an estimated distance of twelve miles they came upon a side canyon, down which they succeeded in descending, with their animals, and procuring a supply of water. They camped at the bottom of this ravine on the night of the 23d of August, and on the morning of the 24th started to ascend the right bank to the table land above. In making the ascent they were attacked by Indians, and Captain BAKER, being the leader, was killed at the first fire. The two remaining men, JAMES WHITE and HENRY STROLE, after ascertaining the fate of their comrade, fought their way back into the canyon, and, getting beyond the reach of their assailants, hastily unpacked their animals, securing their ammunition and a small stock of provisions, and proceeded on foot down the canyon to the banks of the Grand River. Here they constructed a raft of dry cotton wood, composed of three sticks ten feet in length and eight inches in diameter, the ends being securely tied together by lariat ropes, and, having stowed away their provisions and arms, they embarked at midnight on their adventurous voyage. The following morning, being the 28th of August, they made made a landing, repaired their raft by some additional pieces of light cedar, and continued on their course.

The river here was about 200 yards wide, flowing regularly at a rate of two and a half to three miles per hour. At this estimate they reached the mouth of Green River, and entered the main Colorado thirty miles from the point of starting. Below the junction the stream narrows and is confined between perpendicular rocky walls, gradually increasing in elevation. At an estimated distance of forty miles from the mouth of Green River, they passed the mouth of the San Juan, both streams being here hemmed in by perpendicular walls. From this point the canyon was navigable with only occasional breaks formed by small side canyons, equally inaccessible with the main chasm. Still they experienced no difficulty in continuing their voyage and were elated with the prospect of soon reaching the settlements on the Colorado below the great canyon.

On the 28th, being the fourth day of their journey, they encountered the first severe rapids, in passing one of which HENRY STROLE was washed off, and sank in a whirlpool below. The small stock of provision was also lost, and when WHITE rose from the foaming rapids, he found himself alone, without food or firearms, and with gloomy prospects ahead for accomplishing his adventurous journey. His course now led through the Big Canyon, and was a succession of rapids, blocked up with masses of rock, over which his raft had to be dragged and whirled so that he had to adopt the precaution of tying himself fast to the rocking timbers. In passing over one of the rapids his raft parted, and he was forced to hold on to the fragments by main strength till he effected a landing below in a shallow eddy, where he succeeded in repairing his raft, and resumed his course. At the mouth of the Colorado Chiquito was passed on the fourth day, in the evening, the general appearance of which was particularly noticed, as he was here entangled in an eddy for two hours, till rescued by a strong current. He says, "by the direct interposition of Providence." The course of the river was noted as very crooked, with sharp turns, the view on every side being shut in by the bleak, precipitous walls of "white sandrock." These walls presented a smooth, perpendicular surface above the high-water level, and showed a distinct line of the high-water mark, 30 to 40 feet above the stream. His estimate of the average height of the canyon was 5,000 feet, the upper edge of which flared out about half way from the bottom, thus presenting a ragged crest. The last two days of his canyon ride entered igneous rock took the place of the sandstone, which finally showed distinct breaks on either side, till he reached a more open country, containing small patches of bottom land. Here, for the first time on his route, he encountered Indians, from whom he succeeded in procuring a scanty supply of mesquite bread, barely sufficient to sustain life till he reached Callville, on the 6th of September, fourteen days from the starting, during some of which he had no food of any description.

When finally rescued he presented a pitiful sight; emaciated and haggard with abstinence; his bare feet and legs literally flayed from constant exposure to drenching from water, and the scorching rays of a vertical sun, and his reason almost gone. Being, however, of a naturally strong constitution, he soon recovered his usual health, and is now a stout, thick-set, hearty man. His narrative throughout bears all the evidence of entire reliability, and is sustained by collateral evidence, so that there is no room to doubt that he actually accomplished the journey in the manner and within the time mentioned by him.

CONCLUSIONS.

The following may be summed up as some of the leading facts to be derived from this remarkable voyage, as additions to our previous geographical knowledge of the hydrography of the Colorado River:

1. The actual location of the mouth of the San Juan, 40 miles below Green River Junction, and its entrance by a canyon, continuous with that of the Colorado, above and below the point of junction.

2. From the mouth of the San Juan to the Colorado Chiquito, three days' travel in the swiftest portion of the current, allowing a rate four miles per hour for 12 hours, or 60 miles per day, would give an estimated distance of 150 miles, including the most inaccessible portions of the great canyon.

3. From Colorado Chiquito to Callville ten days' travel were expended. As this portion of the route was more open, and probably comprised long stretches of still water, it would not be safe to allow a distance of more than thirty miles per day, or 300 miles for this interval. Thus, the whole distance traveled would amount to 450 miles, or something over 300 miles from the Green River junction to the head of steamboat navigation on the Colorado.

4. The absence of any distinct cataracts or perpendicular falls would seem to warrant the conclusion that in time of high water, by proper appliances in the form of boats, good, resolute men, and provision secreted in water-proof bags, the same passage may be safely made, and the actual course of the river mapped out, and its peculiar geological features properly examined.

5. The construction of bridges, by a single span, would be rendered difficult of execution, on account of the usual flaring shape of the upper summit; possibly, however, points might be found where the high mesas come nearer together.

6. The estimated average elevation of the canyon at 5,000 feet is less than that given on the authority of Lieutenant IVES, but may be nearer the actual truth, as the result of more continuous observation.

7. The width of the river at its narrowest points was estimated at 100 feet, and the line of high-water mark, 30 to 40 feet above the average stage in August.

8. The long-continued uniformity of the geological formation termed "white sandstone," (probably cretaceous,) is remarkable, but under this term may have been comprised some of the lower stratified formations. The contrast in reaching the dark, igneous rocks was so marked that it could not fail to be noticed.

9. ANY prospect for useful navigation up or down this canyon during the season of high water, or transportation of lumber from the upper pine regions, could not be regarded as feasible, considering the long distance, and the inaccessible character of the river banks.

10. No other satisfactory method of exploration, except along the course of the river, could be adopted to determine its actual course, and peculiarly natural features, and JAMES WHITE, as the pioneer of this enterprise, will probably retain the honor of being the only man who has traversed through its whole course the great canyon of the Colorado, and lived to recount his adventurous ride, this perilous trip. Respectfully yours, C. C. PAREY, Geologist of the Survey.

Kings County Republican General Committee.

The regular monthly meeting of the Kings County Republican General Committee was held at headquarters, in Washington-street, Brooklyn, last evening, Mr. SILAS B. DUTCHER, President, in the chair.

A communication was received from the Eighth Ward Republican Association, preferring charges against Mr. W. H. N. CADMUS, of that Association and a member of the General Committee, and asking that the General Committee take action on the subject.

A short discussion took place, in which Messrs. REEVE, WEBSTER, RICHARDSON and CADMUS took part; and on motion of Mr. RICHARDSON a special committee of five was appointed to investigate the charges, and report at the next meeting of the General Committee.

The Special Committee consists of Messrs. RICHARDSON, of the Twenty-second Ward; EMMS, of the Nineteenth Ward; GATES, of the Twenty-first Ward; REEVE, of the Fourth Ward, and HIGGINS, of the Twentieth Ward.

The meeting then adjourned.

End of the Wilson Family Imbroglio.

The inquest in the case of alleged poisoning of ROBERT WILSON before Coroner WHITE, at Hoboken, was resumed last night.

Professor DOREMUS was called, and testified that he had made a thorough analysis of the stomach of the deceased, ROBERT WILSON, and found no evidence of poison whatever.

Doctors BENSON and CHARNLEY testified that they had made the post-mortem examination, and found the lungs in a very decayed condition, and adhering to the walls of the chest. Also that the kidneys were very much enlarged from the excessive use of ardent spirits. The jury, after a brief deliberation, returned a verdict fully exonerating Mr. ISAAC WILSON and family from all blame, and to the effect that deceased died from disease of the kidneys.

Killed by Lightning While Bathing.

On Saturday evening last, FRANK DURST, of No. 837 First-street, MAX WEBNER, of No. 741 Second-avenue, and FREDERICK WEBER, of No. 322 First-avenue, visited Hunter's Point, and entered the river to bathe. While thus engaged, a violent thunder-storm passed over them and the first named was killed and the others stunned by a bolt of lightning, which struck DURST directly on the forehead. The others reached the shore with difficulty; the body of DURST floated down the river and was found the next day at Tenth-street, Hunter's Point, and an inquest held. The verdict rendered was in accordance with the facts narrated. The forehead of DURST was much bruised.

Serious Charges Against a Chief of Police.

Serious charges were preferred by Alderman HOGAN, of Hudson City, and placed in the hands of the Chairman of the Police Committee of the Board of Aldermen, yesterday morning, against Mr. ROBINSON, the Chief of Police of Hudson City. It seems that the parties with a number of friends were at a chowder party in a saloon in that city, when an altercation arose between the Chief and Alderman HOGAN, in the midst of which, it is alleged, the Chief drew a revolver and threatened to shoot the Alderman, and created a general disturbance. The affair will be fully investigated.

Destructive Fire Near Rahway, N. J.

A fire occurred yesterday at BLOODGOOD'S woolen factory, near Rahway, about 9 o'clock. The stock-house was saved by the Rahway firemen. The loss is estimated at about $20,000; partially covered by insurance. A defective flue is said to have been the origin of the fire. Two individuals were run over and had their legs broken by the engines.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

New-York.

A game of base ball was played on the Capitoline Grounds, yesterday, between the Continental Bank Note Company's engravers and the printers of the same establishment. The engravers were the winners by a score of 43 against 42.

MICHAEL MORRIS, a laborer residing in Hoboken, while at work at the corner of Beekman and Cliff streets, accidentally lost his hold on a crow-bar, fell to the street, and a cart passing at the moment passed over him inflicting slight injuries.

Yesterday afternoon a fire occurred on the third floor of No. 216 Mott-street, occupied by NEIL DONT as a dwelling, doing a damage of $100. The damage to the building, which is owned by D. SLEVIEN, was about the same.

The Newark internal revenue receipts during June for Essex County, and the townships of Harrison and Kearney, Hudson County, were as follows: Sales of stamps for manufactured tobacco, $14,698 72; for cigars, $5,003; for beer, $29,446 68; income, special and other taxes, $7,158 60.

The closing exercises of the Misses BUCKNELL'S boarding and day school for young ladies, at New-Brunswick, N. They consisted of recitations from Scriptures, dialogues, music, the presentation of diplomas, and an address by Rev. Dr. E. S. POMEROY, of Brooklyn, in which that gentleman paid a well-deserved compliment to the young ladies. The diplomas were presented by one of the principals with a few very appropriate and beautiful parting words.

Dr. PETERS, of Elizabeth, who is charged with dealing in counterfeit stamps yesterday waived an examination before Commissioner WHITEHEAD at Newark, and was held to bail.

A man named HENRY LOKING was struck and literally torn to pieces on the 32d, by a locomotive attached to an extra train of the Erie Railway at the Hoboken (N. J.) Depot.
